IMMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Bringing the Hate

Dear sociopathic, passive/aggressive, annoying know-it-all: You know who you are. Why did you come to Boston in the first place? We never found out. Only to leave it so secretly and in a dysfunctional manner a paltry three years later? If you can't make it here honey, you might as well give up. Are you just a sad sociopath or merely a stupid white-trash girl trying desperately to fight your smutty, illegitimate DNA? You were yet another girl from a broken family that left a car crash of a life far away and tried to start over in OUR town that isn't and NEVER will be yours—trying to use us native Bostonians to your advantage. You came here to escape your past and were offered a job that was impossible to refuse. When that wasn't enough, you desperately tried to find a husband who was going to give you even more—more money, more status, more things that would make you feel less and less like the trailer trash that you are. Basically someone to pay your way so you don't have to work, because let's face it, you're extremely lazy. You finally fooled some poor guy into asking you to marry him (not in Boston mind you—this was the first warning sign), and all within a year of meeting him. The worst torture was yet to come when everyone at work had to endure hearing you talk about your stupid second (yes, second) wedding for six straight months. This is what made everyone hate you, hate anyone who gets married and anything that has to do with weddings. Thank you for ruining it for us with your dumb chatter. Karma can be unforgiving, so we'd suggest that you become a little more aware of your ridiculous moves throughout life and, instead, evolve. Or you can always go back to the trailer park from which you came. Thanks for everything. Not.
—Better Off Bostonians

Jury's In

To Heather at Jury's, thanks for the after-wedding party drinks! We were very touched by your gesture—such a sweet thing to do, and so unexpected!
—The Lesbian Brides

Let's Get Lost

I stopped you on the street to ask if you knew where the 66 bus stop was in Harvard Square. You were cute, funny and nice enough to lead me to the exact location. Too bad I was too chicken to ask for your number. Perhaps I'll get lost again, and maybe next time you'll find me.
—Lost in Conversation

Seeing Red

To the beautiful cashier—you know who you are. You're dark, brooding and work at Blue Shirt every day. There's no way to make this sound noncreepy, but I'm totally infatuated with you. I feel like there's an affinity between us, or could be. If I'm right, then you'll know that I'm not a crazy stalker, but just shy and have no idea how to start a conversation, until now. If you're interested in getting coffee or taking a walk or just having that conversation, please wear something red, so I know. Carpe diem and we'll see...
—Amelie in English

Uno Who You Are

To the Goddess I met for all of two seconds in Uno's on Boylston Street on May 27: You waved to me and I gave you some Mardi Gras beads. I was with a buddy whom I couldn't leave (it was his bachelor party). Otherwise I would've chased after you. I've been kicking myself ever since! Please get in touch with me, as I would love to see you again!
—unobeads@yahoo.com

Drop that Monkey And Swing with Me

Katie, you're my princess, my friend, my buddy and my favorite bartender. I love to watch you, to talk to you, to need you and for you to need me in the way you do. I know that you're currently with another man, but he hurts you. I can hardly watch the searing, wretched pain that I've seen developing in your eyes day by day for the past two months. He chooses not to understand what you have to deal with. He chooses not to support you through thick and thin. I believe that if someone loves you, he'd be there no matter what. He should be there at your lowest point and at your highest point. He should continue to tell you how beautiful, caring, thoughtful, sensitive and loving you are. He has in no way earned your wonderful love. I don't know what your feelings are and I'd never want to intrude on the pain that you have to deal with right now, but I hope that you know that he's not the only one out there for you. You can do a lot better. It kills me to see my little princess in pain. I hope you'll make the right choice. If you choose him over me, I'll still be in my favorite bar on Causeway Street to see you. I love you.
—On Your Side

On a Roll

It was Sunday, June 18. You came out of the elevator on rollerblades, took your shades off, and said hi as you passed me. Maybe you were just being polite, but you took my breath away, so I'm taking this chance. I have long blonde hair and was with an older lady who I work for in your apartment building. I'd love the opportunity to have drinks with you one night after work. Leave a note for the English girl in 119, if you're single and interested.

rockie horoscope

UNE 28 – JULY 11, 2006

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

CANCER JUNE 21–JULY 22

f all the lunar phenomena that resonate in the tender soul of the Moon Child, none rikes as significant a note as the annual Cancer new moon. The Cancer full moon in the ead of winter is a close second. But a new moon promises new beginnings, a fresh start nd a propitious moment in the astrological year for you personally. So take a moment to nvision how you'd like to see the next four weeks play out, remembering that Mercury is etrograde from July 4–28, most of that time back-pedaling in your sign.

LEO

ULY 23–AUGUST 22

he two times a year that your sun ruler trines lucky Jupiter ecall my favorite I Ching pronouncement: "Extreme good rtune." So no matter what you're doing around June 30, r who else is on the scene, you'll be in an excellent position r the favorable events or emotions that follow. Since xpansive Jupiter is in Scorpio, family, neighbors and real state matters could be the areas that'll offer the biggest ayoffs. Although there is a chance there will also be the lks with their hands out asking for "more, please."

VIRGO

heads-up for Virgos who live by e-mail and phone: Your ercury ruler turns retrograde on July 4. Can you imagine he hell the holiday traffic will be? It's not until July 28 that he Messenger faces forward again, so if there's a vacation in our future, those would be the weeks to take it. Few people ttract new business or connect with new people during etrograde; however, a visit to old friends could reveal formation you now need to know. Retrograde is a good me to reevaluate, repeat and, if necessary, repent.

LIBRA

ke the summer solstice, the Cancer new moon accentuates e top position in your solar chart. Since the new moon arks the beginning of a fresh lunar cycle, look for an pportunity that'll take your career arc a little further out here. The Cancer vibe also emphasizes family connections nd how they can be strengthened. So if a relative makes a ggestion, think twice before summarily dismissing it. You ever know for sure how things are going to turn out. esides, there's a surprise in store when your amenable enus ruler contacts innovative Uranus around July 4.

SCORPIO

if you weren't feeling lucky enough, you're due for an extra ast of good fortune when the water sign–friendly Cancer sun ines protective Jupiter in Scorpio around June 30. The next me something this spectacular will occur is in November, on e very last day of solar Scorpio. So make sure that you aximize every opportunity you're given to become a more ominent, more prosperous player in the game of your life. ut if the reward isn't immediately apparent, look again after piter, currently retrograde, turns direct on July 6.

SAGITTARIUS

ad for Scorpio. It's your bounteous Jupiter ruler that's vored by the Cancer sun and so, by association, are you. nce the sun is transiting your house of other people's sources, there's a good chance that someone will cough up hatever you need. You're also about to receive an sortment of goodies that Venus in your house of gnificant others decides to offer; that is, after due eliberation as befits her short-lived placement in dualistic emini. Pretty people bearing pretty presents; perhaps a artner who gives good gossip?

CAPRICORN

ECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

llowing close on the heels of the summer solstice is the ancer new moon, an event that should confirm the eginning of a relationship that can be quite influential— robably for the next six months or until the Capricorn new moon in January shifts the focus back to you. You may also sense that big changes are in store because gigantic Jupiter has been stretching your limits while it's been testing your Saturn ruler. However, this expansion process won't be completed until their final square aspect in October.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Surprise! Work may be the subject most on your mind during the Fourth of July holiday. That's because far-seeing Jupiter in your Scorpio career zone is supported by the creative and caring Cancer sun. If that work involves food, so much the better; same goes for children and recreation. You're also about to have your intrinsic idealism tested when brazen Mars in your Leo house of partners urges you to participate in a venture that could be grossly overrated. It won't be easy to withstand the pressure, unless you remember that patience is the key to heaven.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Another summer in which you luck out. That's because Mercury's three-week retrogression takes place in your house of recreation and entertainment. So while other signs are anticipating equipment failures, scheduling snafus or hassles with home repairmen, Fish face the prospect of delaying gratification if their golf date doesn't show up on time. Unless you're in the hotel or sports events business, are running a day camp for kids or touring with a band, Mercury retrograde (July 4–28) shouldn't have much of an impact.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

You may think you've had your fill of domestic bliss when your Mars ruler, currently in Leo, was in Cancer for the first time in two years. But now that the sun is passing through your home base, there's more family affiliation (or, depending if you're already fed up, affliction) to come. Despite Mercury's move from Cancer to Leo on June 28, the phone calls and conversations won't stop for long. On July 4, the Messenger turns retrograde and revisits Cancer from July 10 until Aug. 10. Consider checking into a hotel for the duration.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Money matters could have greater impact when your Venus ruler transits your Gemini house of personal finances from June 23 through July 18. Cherished opinions may change during this transit-what you thought was valuable last week might not count for much after the July 4. Nonetheless, don't discount the contribution a partner makes, especially during the extremely fortunate weekend of June 30. That's when the nurturing Cancer sun trines generous Jupiter in your Scorpio marriage house. Accept the offer and share in the bounty.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

The Cancer new moon on June 25 could inaugurate a new financial venture, one that you may find satisfying beyond expectations. Not that you're destined to reap a huge profit, although that's a possibility, but the emotional payoff can be especially rewarding. On a purely superficial and vain level, having attractive Venus in your sign until July 18 couldn't hurt. You'd be foolish to ignore the drawing power the goddess adds or downplay the importance of the people eager to enter your charmed circle. Start the summer romance already!

NICE VIEW...

If I had as many influential friends as the Public Garden does, I'd be more popular than a sumo wrestler at a cannibal convention, judging by the Green and White Ball, a black-tie dinner dance to benefit the Friends of the Public Garden.

Held at the Ritz-Carlton, the event attracted such high-profile and prominent types as the evening's honorees, Chanel head honcho Arie Kopelman and his stunning wife, Coco, their in-laws, Marjie and Bob Kargman, media mogul Amos Hostetter and the lovely Barbara, cochair Nina Doggett, captain of industry Jack Welch and the beautiful Suzy, Palm Beach denizens Karyn and Kevin Lamb, the delightful David and Wendy Murphy, the hale and hearty Frank Gilligan and hair deity Mario Russo, blonde bombshell Kathy Burns and her other half, Michael Greeley, a smattering of the Fidelity Johnsons, superfun couple Maud and Andrew Cabot, interior design avatars Chris Drake and Lee Bierly, Beacon Hill bright young things Alison and Patrick Fischoeder, visionary power mogul Jim Gordon and the lovely Meg, Back Bay party pair Steve and Jeryl Oristaglio (looking like John Singer Sargent's "Portrait of Madame X"), Republican publican Tom Kershaw squiring the eternally gorgeous Hollis Colby, Red Sox honcho Larry Lucchino with the flawless Stacey, brunette beauty Barbara Jordan, Caribbean goddess Yvette Thomas-Henry (newly transplanted from St. Croix), Parks Department booster Mary Hines, the always elegant Jennifer Donaldson Janes, anchor pair Jonathan Hall and Karen Marinella, the superchic Jane Roy, visiting dignitaries Gita and Mark Costa, the beautiful Randi Cutler and her loving husband, Joel, Cartier's handsome devil Cedric Tonello and the exquisite Thanh, and so on and so forth down the list of Boston's most illustrious and civic-minded individuals.

The ballroom was transformed into a veritable fairyland with gigantic centerpieces of blossoming dogwood rising eight feet from the tables and festooned with votive candles, which prompted one guest to quip, "No trees died in the making of this gala," while another said, "I'd like to see anyone try and take home one of the arrangements."

However, the evening's most amusing comment came from the person who was asked, "Where do you stand on nude beaches?" to which he responded, "Obviously, where I can see everything."

THE BODHISATTVA IS ALIVE AND WELL AND VACATIONING IN LISBON...

All the Jews from Who's Whoville, and plenty of good-looking goyim, turned out at the EMC Club at Fenway Park for the Anti-Defamation League's 4th annual Young Leadership Celebration, honoring staggeringly beautiful art historian Jennifer Winn and studly real estate magnate Adam Berger.

On-hand to fete them were such luminaries as Judi and Douglas Krupp (for whom the award is named), cochairs Dahlia Aronson and Robyn Steinberg, smokingly sexy eye surgeon Caroline Baumal, attorney-at-large Caesar Belbel, security mogul Brad Gordon and his g geous wife, Johanna, with his pare Brookline party pair Lloyd and Diane G don, real estate magnate Arthur Wi (Jennifer's Dad) with daughter Becky, Gilbert and son-in-law Chris Matche the beyond-fabulous Liza Cohen, hotel real estate scion Todd Saunders, del table art dealer Abi Ross Goodman her other half, Mark, marketing maver David Grossman and the lovely Mary Sisk, twinkly newlyweds Toby and Mich Kumin, incorrigible scamp Andy Lev and the improbably tall James Escarze attorney-at-large Evan Kushner, and woman who said, "This might be the yo leadership celebration, but some of us a little less young than others."

At one end of the room was a sushi while at the other was a buffet of ballp favorites like hot dogs and pretzels, wh one guest likened to being "between devil and the deep, blue sea," but it was scintillating guest-list (not to ment free-flowing booze) that kept every happy until it was time to go home.

The most amusing exchange of evening:

One woman said to a friend, "I'm go to India to study with the Dalai Lama two weeks. Why don't you come?" which the friend replied, "I'm already lightened. I'm going to Portugal." IB

ALL THE BEST

Work on this double-sized issue began back in March, when 19 in-the-know locals (see page 41) sat down to dinner with IMPROPER staffers to cast their votes for the best bars, restaurants, stores, salons, entertainment and more in our city.

Several months of researching, deliberating, writing, editing, photographing and designing followed, and the result of our labors is the chunky publication you hold in your hands. It recognizes 300 places, people and things that we've deemed superlative for 2006, and we hop you'll consider it your guide to getting the most out of life in Boston.

NEW IN TOWN

Saucy Southie

The new 17-story Westin Boston Waterfront Hotel in Southie, which opened June 21, is the largest hotel to open in Boston in more than 20 years. Adjacent to the new Boston Convention & Exhibition Center, this 793-room hotel is grandiose in every aspect—a gargantuan three-story lobby features a first floor lounge called the Birch Bar, and an even bigger restaurant, the American grill Sauciety.

Faux birch trees, a dramatic stone floor and ornate stone walls decorate the Birch Bar, which is filled with plush seating from couches to barstools. Here you can order small plates like the now-ubiquitous sliders (tuna with wasabi mayo, lamb with yogurt mint sauce, and beef with tomato-onion marmalade), chicken lollipops topped with spicy currant glaze, and a New England artisan cheese platter served with truffled honey and aged balsamic vinegar.

Sauciety, a modern and Asian-accented space with soaring ceilings and scattered tables (no bumping elbows here), sits just beyond the bar. Its menu, as implied by the name, has a unique focus on sauces and dips that are served on the side and can be shared. For each entrée and dessert, you choose two sauces or dips from a list of 20. The share-and-dip concept is introduced early in the meal, with a basket of fresh bread that comes with bowls of scrumptious feta-and-roasted-red-pepper hummus, lemon-artichoke dipping sauce and roasted garlic oil.

Entrée options range from New England standbys (a selection of fish) to a choice of grilled, pan-roasted or broiled meats, all with suggested sauce pairings that are broken down into categories of spicy, bold or mild. For example, the recommended sauce for the seared king salmon fillet ($24) is a lemon-artichoke emulsion, while the grilled aged New York sirloin steak ($29), pairs nicely with a green pepper–black trumpet mushroom sauce.

Sauciety's skewers of tender beef, chicken, shrimp or mixed vegetables are colorful, playful and yummy. They arrive at your table poking out of a boxy holder, with side sauces of chimichurri and roasted red pepper romesco. Your choice of red berry, mocha, lemon curd, kiwi, chocolate or burnt vanilla sauces accompany the desserts (all $9), which include a crème brûlée trio, chocolate milk and cake, baked Alaska, and a sweet skewer made with a chocolate-dipped strawberry, marshmallows, Oreos and pineapple. 425 Summer St., Boston (617-532-4600).

Seth Mnookin

During the 2005 season, Newton native and journalist S Mnookin lived every Red Sox fan's dream: He became of the team. He went on road trips, had access to the c house and even had his own desk at Fenway. His b Feeding the Monster (which was slated to release July gives a behind-the-scenes look at what he learned du his time with the team. Mnookin reads from his boo Newtonville Books July 12 and Borders in Boston July 2

Improper Bostonian: How did the opportunity to ge inside the Red Sox front office arise?

Seth Mnookin: I had just finished Hard News, a b about the New York Times, and in the time before it released, Vanity Fair assigned me to cover the Red S 2004 playoff run. I spent the next couple of months in viewing front office guys for Vanity Fair. Parallel to t my book came out, and since the New York Times ov part of the Sox, there started to be some interest on team's part. The book grew from there.

IB: What time span does the book cover?

SM: It starts off with a quick history of the organizat from the late 1800s into the end of the Duquette era, that's all secondary research. All the primary material gins in 2001 with the current ownership group's purch of the team and goes into about May of this season.

IB: After your time in the locker room, I'll put the over/un on times you saw Johnny Damon naked at 60. Which is it?

SM: I've heard the stories, but it would be the unc Luckily, Johnny saved most of the nudity for times wh only his teammates were around.

IB: Was there much to the allegedly stormy relationship b tween Pedro and Schilling?

SM: Jealousy is going to be an issue in every kind of wo place, not just baseball. And what made Pedro so domin was his focus and desire to be the best. I think it was d cult for him when Curt was getting most of the attention in 2004.

IB: Did the Sox ever think that David Ortiz could be this successful?

SM: Theo always looks for guys with potential, but he's the first person to say that he never imagined Ortiz would become the most feared hitter in the league. —Rich Levine

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Rainy Day Blues... If the recent soggy weather's got you feeling blue, you're not alone. And according to WCVB weatherman David Brown, it's justified. "May and June were the rainiest consecutive months on record," he says. May '06 was the second-wettest ever, with 12.48 inches of rain (the average in May is 3.24 inches). June ranked as the third-wettest in history with 10.09 inches, more than three times the average of 3.22 inches for June in Boston. Together, the two months of abnormal weather brought us to 313 percent above normal precipitation. The good news is that weatherman Dave predicts the next couple of months will be better. "How could it get worse?" he asks. And Massachusetts won't have to worry about a drought for a long time. In fact, we've now got enough water to last us two years. The bad news: Hurricane season is coming, and according to Brown, a big one usually hits every seven years. "We're due for one," he says.

Tavern Times Two... The owners of popular Brookline watering hole the Washington Square Tavern just expanded with a second location two miles away. Gerry Finnegan and David Brilliant opened Beacon Street Tavern June 21 in the location that used to house Via Via Café, after gutting and r habbing the space. The ne tavern's menu is similar that of its older sibling, fe turing American fare like si loin steak, grilled halibu turkey tips and burgers. It got an outdoor deck, a bac room/lounge with a firepla and specialty "classic" coc tails, and a vibe Finnegan d scribes as "old-school cla with a little bit of funk." 103 Beacon St., Brookline (61 713-2700).

Pet Shop Boy... After ma aging his aunt and uncle's p store in Fairhaven and the owning his own shop in Attl borough, Aaron Motta has r alized his dream: his own boutique on Newbury Street. "My inventor is completely different here—more upscale," Motta says of Paw poochies, his new dog "barkery" and boutique. Here, pet owners w find items like $360 Puchie carrying bags, along with an array of reaso ably priced toys, doggie clothing and treats. Motta's got plans to stoc his store with a line of all-natural dog food in addition to his natur treats—making it a veritable Whole Foods for the canine set. 272 Nev bury St., Boston (617-587-5255). www.pawpoochies.com.

Ritzy Roche... After 20 years in the same location at 585 Commerci St., high-end home furnisher Roche-Bobois moved to the building th houses the Ritz Carlton on July 8. You'll find the same top European d signers and changing collections (the latest is Sacha Lakic's Speed Up line but in a floor space with an entirely new look. *2 Avery St., Boston (61 742-9611). www.roche-bobois.com. —Leslie P. FASH FLASH

Dress Me Up, Dress Me Down

Tired of wanting Gucci and Chanel but having to shop Banana? This summer you have choices. London-based retailer Reiss opened a bi-level boutique on Newbury, bridging the gap between runway attitude and modern street style. Targeting fashion-hungry 20- and 30-somethings, Reiss creates pieces that make you want to dress up for work in the morning. You'll find cropped jackets ($135–$200) inspired by '40s tailoring, and belted knits over skinny trousers or jeans. There are perfect party silhouettes, from sexy dresses ($155–$400) with prim '20s-style flapper touches to one-shouldered pieces in floaty fabrics. Don't skip out before you accessorize: The season's pick is a feathered headband ($80). For guys, the story is the new dapper man, complete with polka-dotted hanky. But you needn't be a dandy to do well here. Suits ($780–$880) are expertly tailored, with custom, subtle details. Shirts are slim, knits luxurious and layered, and the denim dark. With 39 stores abroad, the company's Boston outpost is only its second venture in the U.S. (The first store is in New York's SoHo). Their concept is simple: to produce fresh looks from head to toe, day to night. They succeed. 132 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-5800). www.reiss.co.uk. —Marni Elyse Katz

IMPROPER REPORTS

Full Deck

On warm summer nights, cocktails are always better on a bar's rooftop deck.

Tavern on the Water

1270 Boylston St., Boston
(617-867-6526)
www.baseballtavernboston.com
Located across from Fenway Park, the Baseball Tavern's roof deck is a replica of the Park, complete with its own Green Monster. Open game nights and weekends at 3 pm, the roof has a full-service bar and waitstaff.

The Black Rhino
21 Broad St., Boston (617-263-0101)
www.theblackrhino.com
One of the only roof decks located in the heart of downtown, the Black Rhino has a full-service bar in the summer. You can order food off the menu, but it's standing room only on the deck, which opens at 4:30 pm.

Ristorante Fiore
250 Hanover St., Boston (617-371-1176)
www.ristorantefiore.com
The only one of its kind in the North End, this roof deck opens at 4 pm for dinner. With a garden feel that includes heaters for chilly nights and rain awnings, it's also a good choice when the forecast is sketchy.

Rattlesnake Bar and Grill
www.rattlesnakebar.com
This roof deck is one of the most popular spots in town on a summer evening, so stake your territory early if you want to nab a table. Always hosting a lively afterwork scene, this deck also offers lunch and dinner, with a full bar from noon until close.

Seaport Bar & Grille
150 Northern Ave., Boston (617-357-8121)
At this waterfront spot, you can order a drink or have a sit-down meal (the menu features dishes like burgers, baked scrod and steak tips) while looking out at the Boston skyline and the harbor. The large roof deck boasts its own bar, with 15 umbrella-laden tables, and a covered gazebo.

Tavern on the Water
One 8th St., Pier 6, Charlestown (617-242-8040)
www.tavernonthewater.com
This Charlestown favorite has multiple outdoor seating areas, including a roof deck. Boaters can pull right up to the wharf and walk onto the patio. With some of the best harbor views, this spot offers a full-service bar and an extensive menu at all of its outdoor options. —Casey L. Dunphy

TASTY TIDBITS

Red Sky at Night

Red Hot Opening... Most of Faneuil Hall's nightlife is geared toward a young crowd. But restaurateurs Edward Brooks and Russ Demariano are taking a more upscale approach at the recently opened Red Sky, a sleek bar/restaurant/lounge on North Street in the former home of Naked Fish. The spot is filled with plush red couches and a 30-table dining room in back, where you can enjoy fare created by chef Jay Santangelo that ranges from American and Italian to French and Asian. The main dining room is open every day until 10:30 pm, and a bar menu featuring dishes like shrimp tempura, eggplant caviar and chorizo grilled cheese is available until 1 am. 16–18 North St., Boston (617-742-3333). www.redskyboston.com.

Blooming green tea (left) and Sichuan aromatic duck from Anise

Sizzlin' Sichuan... Zheng Hu is no stranger to the local restaurant scene, having spent the last few years at her Medford Square restaurant, Chili Garden. Now she's bringing her business closer to the Hub with Anise in Kendall Square. The 120-seat restaurant and outdoor patio (next to the neighboring Flat Top Johnnys) is open for lunch Mon.–Fri., and dinner seven days a week. The menu offers a wide variety of Sichuan dishes, courtesy of chef Yujun Zhou. Highlights include a whole striped bass, Sichuan spicy rabbit, and duck tongue with soy bean paste. 1 Kendall Square, Building 300, Cambridge (617-577-8668).

Red Sky's pork chop with sweet potato hash, sauteed spinach ramesco and crispy onion rings

Lapping It Up... Could we interest you in some beef tenderloin–flavored water? How about a tall glass of Bacon Delight? Yeah, it sounds gross to us, but not to your cat or dog, and thanks to Boston-based MolliBrands, Inc., your pet can now get in on the flavored water craze. Why do Fido and Fluffy need bottled water? MolliBrand CEO Tomas Malave cites research showing that tap water sources contain levels of chlorine and fluoride that can be harmful to pets. Molli's new line of nutritionally enhanced flavored water for pets is purified through reverse-osmosis to get all that bad stuff out. Other flavors include roasted turkey and chicken, and they're available in 16.9-oz six-packs, as well as 1- and 1.5-liter bottles. See www.mollibrands.com or call 888-665-5427 for availability. —RL

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been doing a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

THE HUNT FOR BIG RED

Recovering your possessions from an ex-girlfriend is never easy.

When you break up with someone, chances are you're not getting all your stuff back. Some time after the fact you're going to discover that you left an important item at the ex's house, but by then it's too late to retrieve it. This is why, guys, you don't ever want to bring anything you care about over to your girlfriend's house until you get married. For instance, I impose what I call the "Mo-bation" period on any girlfriend. This is the time during which they're not allowed to see my Mo Vaughn rookie cards, which are stored at a safe off-premises location. No girl has yet made it through Mo-bation, because it lasts 10 years. I'm just being pragmatic.

My buddy Ryan isn't so careful, as I learn one recent Friday when he calls and asks if I'm ready for a mission. Ryan and his girlfriend broke up a year ago, and he pulled an unbelievably boneheaded leave-behind. He'd been thinking about it all year, in fact, stressing over how to execute the rescue. It was never a matter of if, it was a matter of when, because a fella can't just abandon his canoe.

That's right, Ryan's leave-behind is no trifling item, no piece of clothing or favorite CD. He's spent a year without Big Red, a sad year bereft of paddling and fishing. Why didn't he retrieve Big Red sooner? That answer becomes clear when he tells me that the orphaned canoe lays not at his ex's house, but at her parent's house. In Hartford.

By the time we reach the outskirts of the former home of the Whalers, Ryan is getting nervous and so am I. "What's her dad like?" I ask. "He owns a lot of guns, actually," Ryan replies, almost as an afterthought muttering, "shotguns." I ask whose fault the breakup was, as that plays a major role in how we'll be received. "Well, she dumped me," he says, "but that was because I was being a jackass." I don't like the sound of that. I see shotguns in our near future.

It's almost lunchtime, so I figure we need a diversion to steel our nerves for the Great Canoe Heist. And if you've ever driven down Route 84, you know that Hartford offers a world-class diversion: Kahoots. I've never been to Kahoots, but their billboards promise "Lunch with a view," and their name promises the opportunity for me to say, "I'm in Kahoots," which has always been a goal of mine.

Here's the entire Kahoots clientele at 12:30 pm on a Friday: a Mexican midget drinking Amaretto-and-Snapple. Also, Ryan and I. That's it. There's no view speak of, but judging from the look of place, that's probably a good thing.

After eating the scarily priced $4 "b and burger" lunch, Ryan and I h avoided our fate long enough. We flee hoots and he wonders out loud if we j missed an opportunity to recruit anot member to our team. "What would h pen," Ryan says, "if her parents ha midget knock on the door and ask for canoe?" A few minutes later, we're pull into the driveway.

For a moment it seems that we luck out and there's nobody home, but so Mom comes to the door and the awkwa ness begins. She's friendly, but she does ever allude to the fact that Ryan and daughter are no longer an item. Perh she doesn't know, and thinks he's just be remiss on stopping by for the past months. For instance, she encourages h to visit the grandparents sometime. "Ye I'll definitely do that," he lies while we l the canoe to his roof with the urgency o NASCAR pit crew.

We bid farewell and pull away, missi accomplished, and give props to the M for her willful blind eye regarding t breakup. She did her best to be pleasa when the reality was that once we got th canoe on the roof, she was never going see either of us again. "See, parents kn what's up," Ryan says. "They've be there." Still, I'm glad the dad wasn't hon

As we roll back onto the highway, thought occurs to me. "Where are the pa dles?" I ask. "Funny you should menti that," Ryan says. "What are you doing t rest of the day?" The paddles are at his e house in Allston. He hasn't talked to her a year, either. "I can get the building ma ager to let us in…" Ryan begins to say.

I interrupt to tell him to take me hom I'll help rescue a canoe, but from this poi on, he's up a creek without a paddle. ■

THAT'S RICH

The Defense Rests

You gotta glove the 2006 Sox.

I close my eyes, and the images are just as clear as ever. There's Jose Offerman lunging for a grounder up the middle with the utter ferocity of an 80-year-old woman standing knee-deep in quicksand. There's Brian Daubach waddling off first base, chasing after a little blooper hit to shallow right like a 2-year-old who's just left a fresh deposit in his diaper. There's Matt Young, in all his tubby, left-handed glory, cleanly fielding a ground ball from the pitcher's mound, turning toward first base and firing the ball in the direction of the Red Sox dugout.

For years, nausea-inducing memories like these defined the Boston Red Sox. Hitting was never an issue; they could always score. But when it came to flashing the leather, Boston was ages behind the rest of the league. Thanks to the last three and a half months, however, I can now look back on those days and laugh. The Boston Red Sox have the best defensive squad in baseball.

When this team came together last winter, you would've had a better chance of getting Ryan Seacrest to stop shaving his legs than of finding an overly optimistic Sox fan. After years of watching power-heavy, defensively inept teams take the field, we were a nation plagued by tunnel vision; all we saw were batting averages and home runs, because that's what we were groomed to think was most important. So we can be forgiven for doubting some of these moves:

Bill Mueller, a former batting champ, was replaced by Mike Lowell, fresh off a season in which he hit .236 amid speculation that he was suffering under MLB's tighter steroids policy.

Edgar Renteria, who'd had his share of tough times in Boston but hit .276 with 70 RBI and will always be considered a top-tier shortstop, was replaced by Alex Gonzalez. No one knew anything about him, because there are about 15 guys with that name in the league, and we weren't exactly sure which one he was.

Kevin Millar, although he'd worn out his welcome, was still a proven major leaguer who'd come through for us before; he was replaced by Kevin Youkilis, the much-heralded "Greek god of walks" who'd hit one whopping home run over 44 games in 2005.

There were other new guys, but those were the three main causes of concern. What we saw were a washed up juicer, a guy who might be someone else and a highly touted prospect who was running out of chances to prove he was worth th hype. But what Theo saw, as did whoev was running the team during his absen (aka Theo), was defense.

Maybe it was the record-setting numb of errors the Sox committed in the 20 World Series, errors that burn a team times out of 100. Or maybe it was To Graffanino's Buckner impersonation th cost the Sox the second game of last yea ALDS. Hell, maybe Theo had some sort primal revelation inside that gorilla su Whatever the reason, he approached th season committed to improving the infie defense.

The absolute worst-case scenario, probably thought: Lowell hits .250, b plays a solid third base; Gonzalez hi .230, but commits fewer errors tha Renteria; Youkilis draws some walk scores a few runs and makes people forg about Millar.

Best-case scenario? Let's just say that n even the most optimistic man in the fro office could have predicted what we' witnessed so far. Heading into the All-St break, those three glaring preseason zits o the face of the Boston Red Sox are now p tential Gold Glove winners, not to men tion the major league leader in doubles, shortstop who hit .310 in May and Jun and the most productive lead-off hitter the AL. Combined with All-Star Mar Loretta, this patchwork Red Sox infiel has—save for your collection of obligato Papi walk-offs—been the most exciting a pect of the first half of the 2006 season.

THIS PATCHWORK RED SOX INFIELD HAS BEEN THE MOST EXCITING ASPECT OF THE FIRST HALF OF THE 2006 SEASON

Beyond sheer numbers, they're showin us how much more fun the game can b when it's played right; that a 3-1 game ca sometimes be more exciting than a 10- slugfest; and that although home runs ar exciting, they're no match for the most satis fying stat of all: wins. IB

THE DANCE

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

Boston's Best Broadway Baby

A former child star still burns bright.

On my writing desk is a musty-looking, pale green bottle of Chartreuse, the French liqueur of brandy and herbs. It was given to me a year ago by Vera Innes, one of Boston's most amazing women. Walter Winchell once called her "the prettiest girl on Broadway," and at 87 years old, she still carries herself like the dancer she was.

"You think the mothers of today plot everything for their children?" she said when we met. "Ha! You ever see Gypsy on Broadway? With Ethel Merman as the most outrageous stage mother in history? She had nothing on my mother. I grew up outside of Fargo, N.D. My mother started me with ballet lessons at age 6. My father sold fancy cars to the farmers. When droughts came in the '30s, the farmers couldn't pay for the fancy cars and he went bust. Mother said she couldn't stand losers, so she got divorced and off we went on the road when I was 9. Mom and me, Vera Fern, the meal ticket. I was 'Little Miss Acrobat' for the Acrobat Health Shoe Company; I'd promote the shoes, doing acrobatics and tap. The company claimed I'd had rickets as a child, that the shoes made me well—and that the shoes could help you too. Hogwash. I was a robust Norwegian girl."

"Didn't you ever question the way your mother ran your life?" I asked.

"She was the strongest person I ever knew, until I met Charlie, my husband. The papers said I was the most photographed child in the country, and Mother struck while the iron was hot. She threw a few costumes in a suitcase, and we never looked back. But I never felt exploited; dancing was a joy to me. And my friends in Fargo would've given anything to trade places."

Vera and her mother traveled the country for 12 years, playing cities and towns from L.A. to Boston, doing "thrilling contortions" and tap dancing for thousands of people at state fairs, in hotel ballrooms and on Broadway. In 1936 she signed a contract with MCA for $75 a week. (This was in the middle of the Great Depression and was considered big money at the time.)

She went on. "Big bands were the rock groups of the 1930s. I fronted famous bands like Glenn Miller's, Wayne King's, Happy Felton's. Hundreds of kids would wait by the stage door, screaming for autographs. I played joints in Texas that had illegal gambling—always upstairs above the stage. We did two shows a night, though if a big roller was there they'd cancel the 11 o'clock show and concentrate on milking him."

"What about Boston?" I asked.

"I'd done Too Many Girls on Broadway, the show where Desi Arnaz met Lucille Ball. Then on to Boston, where I featured at the Latin Quarter in Bay Village. An attractive man kept coming to see me dance. He came every night, and he followed me out of town to Philadelphia, New York and Washington, courting me. He was Charlie Innes from an old Back Bay family. His father was a lawyer who'd served in the legislature. Charlie was in the legislature also. Very romantic. He was jazzy. And I married him. Vera quit at the top of her game, for love.

If you're an optimist, you can shut one door and open another without skipping a beat. Vera and Charlie moved to Beacon Hill and had three children, and she turned her energies to helping others. She became president of the Center for Blind Children and has been president of the Beacon Hill Garden Club three separate times. She was also head of the Charlotte Cushman Club (now the Greek consulate) on Beacon Street, a home away from home for young working girls. "Boy, what an outmoded charity," Vera says. "You got a room with breakfast for $9 a week. And no men upstairs."

Vera still holds court, a mentor and inspiration to whoever crosses her bow. She smiles through the tough stuff; I can't imagine anyone growing up in show biz without becoming cynical, but Vera didn't. Here's what she believes:

1) "You have to notice the ridiculous things in life. Charlie was the majority floor leader. The people who followed him were Billy Bulger and Diane Wilkerson."

2) "About the future, never say never. In 1936, I signed a contract that included television payments. I thought, 'Impossible. It'll be like playing the palace on the moon.'"

3) "If you want something badly enough, never complain about what it takes to get it. I often about doubled up jobs, doing performances on Broadway, then going to the Biltmore Hotel to do a 7:30 and an 11:30 show."

4) "There's a discipline to dancing, the lessons, the performances, that carried over into all things in life. The discipline was good for everything else."

I look at my bottle of Chartreuse. The color is beautiful, just like Vera Innes. And it will always remind me of her secret to the good life: "The glass is always half full."

A cast and crew of locals put their faith in the indie film On Broadway.

Made in Boston

BY ETHAN GILSDORF
PHOTOGRAPHS BY KERRY BRETT HURLEY

Clockwise from top left: Kris Meyer, executive producer; Mark Hankey, producer; Dave McLaughlin, writer-director; and Terrence Hayes, cinematographer, all hail from the Boston area.

When Boston's received the Hollywood treatment in the past, production companies have often shot our fair city superficially. Film and TV crews would visit for only a few days, grabbing some exteriors—a Customs House here; a Beacon Hill pub façade there; and, in the case of Good Will Hunting, enough shots of the Red Line crossing the Charles to make you think it's an el—while the bulk of the footage was shot in a cheaper city like Toronto, or at an L.A. studio or back lot. Attempts to crank up the local color mainly consisted of out-of-town actors mercilessly butchering our beloved accent.

Well, Bostonians waiting for a realistic portrayal of the Hub can rejoice. Flying way under Tinseltown's radar is On Broadway, an independent film with a homespun storyline about an aspiring playwright who's mounting his show in a Boston bar, knitting family and community together. The movie not only was wholly shot around Boston, but also was made by an entirely local team of producers, financers and creative talent. Best of all, the cast knows how to do our wicked hard patois justice: "Open your mouth and never close it," quips Saturday Night Live star (and Burlington native) Amy Poehler, who appears with her husband, Will Arnett.

The $1 million movie features plenty of familiar faces besides homegirl Poehler. There's Belmont-bred funnyman Mike O'Malley, star of the CBS sitcom Yes, Dear; Watertown's Eliza Dushku, best known for her work in Bring It On and Buffy the Vampire Slayer; and Dorchester's Robert Wahlberg, older brother to Mark and Donnie. Headlining the cast is erstwhile New Kid on the Block and Jamaica Plain native Joey McIntyre, at 33 not so much a kid anymore and aiming for serious acting gigs.

The ensemble of area actors gives the film a genuine local flavor. As O'Malley points out, "Boston has a very authentic feel to its corner of the world that you don't get in Toronto." With this cast, "you have people who know the jargon, the accent, the place." In other words, the movie has street cred.

So the logical question is, what attracted these name-brand actors to the project? The first answer: the film's crew, led by writer-director and West Roxbury native Dave McLaughlin. The film, which McLaughlin describes as a "blend of heart and humor," is partly based on his real-life experience directing a play called God Eliza Dushku returned home for a supporting role in the film.

A Bostonian by marriage, Will Arnett displayed his comic chops on Arrested Development.

Willing in the back room of the Burren in Davis Square. It's a movie about taking risks—a subject that McLaughlin knows intimately. When he took a two-month leave of absence from his job with the Boston Redevelopment Authority to direct the script he'd been working on for six years, his only previous credit was writing the screenplay for 1998's Southie.

To overcome his jitters, McLaughlin rallied Boston-area industry veterans to the cause. "I wanted to surround myself with people who were much more talented than me in their disciplines," he says. Enter executive producer Kris Meyer of Quincy, who helped run Farrelly brothers productions like Fever Pitch and Stuck on You; L.A.-based cinematographer and South Boston native Terrence Hayes; actor-producer and Cantabrigian Lance Greene; producer Mark Hankey, owner of Picture Park Productions, Boston's largest commercial film company; and producer Charlie Harrington, of Cohasset, a location manager for films like Lemony Snicket's A Series of Unfortunate Events and The Last Samurai.

He may be a rookie, but McLaughlin has earned the team's respect. "Dave was a natural. I could tell at the first meeting that he was a director," says Harrington, who's currently working on another locally shot directorial debut, Ben Affleck's Gone, Baby, Gone. "Dave knew he was writing a million-dollar movie. He thought about limited locations and the number of times you have to move the company."

"We're shooting [what should be] a $5 million film for $1 million," adds Mark Hankey. "Dave is just such a genuine guy that people want to jump in and help." In fact, most actors took a cut from their going rate to be part of McLaughlin's vision.

"I miss the certain sense of honesty here. In L.A. there's a forced smile. There's no B.S. in Boston."

—ELIZA DUSHKU

With a solid cast and crew in place, Broadway seemed ready to roll in the fall 2005—until the bucks suddenly fell throug On to Plan B. Charlie Harrington shopped t script around, and it eventually made its way Beverly's Henry Bertolon, who made his f tune in the technology industry. He and l wife, Donna, retired early and were interest in doing a movie. The first-time movie mog agreed to bankroll a first-time director.

"We liked the fact it was going to be produc right here in Boston," Henry Bertolon says, location as an extra at Waltham's Skellig pu where much of the film was shot. Recouping t $1 million investment isn't the goal, he says, b it wouldn't hurt. "This is either the first film many, or the last one we do."

To keep costs down, the production leveraged connections. "On our next movie, t food will be better," Donna Bertolon says, glancing at the craft table strewn with doni and coffee percolators. In addition to local restaurants donating food at cost, RV cent sent trailers, hotels gave bargain rates and the mayor's office expedited the process shoot in places like the Public Garden.

"Everyone's generosity and kindness were incredible," says Meyer, who along wi Poehler and assistant director Greg Smith attended BC with McLaughlin. In fact, E itself is lending use of its high-end Avid Adrenaline equipment to edit the film this su mer. "All that money we're saving goes back into the film in post-productio McLaughlin says, adding that he hopes the film will be done in time to compete on t fall film-festival circuit.

The last financial element that fell into place—and just in time—was the assachusetts Motion Picture Tax Incentive. On Broadway is one of the first ms to take advantage of this new law giving production companies tax edits for shooting in the Commonwealth. The law is intended to prevent other $90 million blockbuster like Martin Scorsese's The Departed from ipping town, but even low-budget, Boston-bred movies generate money r the local economy, says actor Sean Lawlor, who plays McIntyre's father the film. "Everyone eats lunch at that restaurant next door."

As far as the cast goes, perhaps the biggest incentive to get involved was the portunity to shoot on location around Boston itself. For natives like Mike Malley, making On Broadway was a true homecoming. "That's the bonus of ing a movie like this—you get to come back with people you have a shared story with. That's kind of what this movie is about," he says.

"My family is still in Burlington," says Poehler. "It's a great reason to come ck. Boston for me means my family."

Eliza Dushku says that while back in Watertown, she spent nights in her ildhood bed. Her mother is a political science prof at Suffolk University and r father, also a teacher, owns a convenience store in Southie. "After eight ars in L.A., I miss… the certain sense of honesty here. [In L.A.], there's the ced smile. There's no B.S. [in Boston]. People here have formed real bonds."

And Joey McIntyre reverts to the accent of his youth while reflecting on w far he's come. "Career-wise, it's nice to have a role like this and be ready it," he says. "And to be back in Boston, in your own hometown, it's so much tter that it happened this way." iB

TV's Mike O'Malley plays McIntyre's brother, Father Rollie O'Toole.

Former teen idol Joey McIntyre stars as fledgling playwright Jack O'Toole.

Robert Wahlberg also had a role in Southie, Dave McLaughlin's screenwriting debut.

annoyingly like your mother as this might sound, we now what's best for you.

That's why we slave over this issue.

After all, why should you go to the effort and expense of trying every new restaurant featuring the atest food fad (monkfish liver–flavored Pop Rocks, nyone?) when you have us to do it for you? Why hould you trouble yourself to ferret out the groovist new boutique in some tucked-away corner of the ity, only to find that it's not quite as chic as all the uzz led you to expect? We're here to do the legork for you.

That's not to say that you don't know what's what.

It's just that we know when what's what is actully what's what, so to speak, which is the raison 'être for this, our annual lineup of the very finest n eating, drinking, shopping, enjoying, and otherwise taking advantage of all that this city has to offer.

Not surprisingly, determining our winners is a orm of alchemy—a subjective blend of art, science nd mysticism (à la "I can't resist eating a burrito here whenever I'm in the neighborhood"). Invariably, our choices ruffle a few feathers, and to that we an only say: tough titties. Either write us a letter, tart a concerted PR campaign, or publish your own damn magazine. We stand by what we say, but if you know better, let us know.

In the interest of transparency, however, we'll lay bare the process by which we arrive at our conclusions:

First, we assemble an eclectic list of some of the most interesting characters hereabouts. Second, we invite them to a lavish and (if we do say so ourselves) wildly entertaining dinner party, which this year was graciously and generously hosted by Mistral (see Guaranteed Great Meal, Back Bay). Third, we ask them to fill out a ballot where the last three pages tend to be nothing but gobbledygook because they've all had such a good time (and, yes, we take that into account). We also take into account whether someone has a conflict of interest or an agenda to pursue.

This year, our panel of judges comprised:

Adriana Jenkins, jewelry designer; Angela Peri, founder and director of Boston Casting; Barbe Ennis, president of Ennis Inc.; Ben Mezrich, author; Bert Jacobs, cofounder of Life Is Good; Beth Krudys, assistant to the senior vice president/Fenway affairs for the Boston Red Sox; Bill Brett, photographer; Clint Cavanaugh, Nanette Lepore store manager; Colette Greenstein, director of marketing for the Comedy Connection; Duncan Kennedy, professor at Harvard Law School; Ernie Boch Jr., president and CEO of Boch Enterprises; John Jacobs, cofounder of Life Is Good; Karen Swensen, NECN anchor; Luke Russert, XM radio host; Paul Epstein, cofounder of the charity Foundation To Be Named Later; Ryan McCourt, project manager for McCourt Construction; Shawn Feddeman, vice president of public relations for Comcast Cable's New England division; Susan Tran, Fox25 News reporter; and Tim Kirwan, general manager of InterContinental Hotels Group.

Once dessert and coffee are served, we collect the ballots, tally the votes and then spend a few months researching the nominees, breaking tie votes and weighing in with our own informed and emphatic opinions.

The result is what follows, as elucidated by yours truly, with the help of a Pulitzer Prize–worthy team of migrant elves (although they prefer the terms "writer" and "intern"). You can call them whatever you want, so long as you thank them when you see them.

Their names are:

Whitney Allen, Rachel Brean, Ezra Dyer, Andrew Graham, Julie Hatfield, Linda Laban, Andy Levinsky and Keith Regan.

Here's hoping you enjoy our Boston's Best, 2006 edition.

BAGELS
Katz Bagel Bakery
139 Park St., Chelsea, 617-884-9738

The secret to these superb bagels can't simply be that they're boiled before being baked, or that Katz's ingredients are the finest available. We're convinced that bagel elves sneak in every night to make the 10-or-so varieties available daily. Devotees routinely drive here for their weekend fix of piping hot bagels. A little known secret: The pizza bagels—something our Bubbe would call a sacrilege—are fantastic. Needless to say, you can also get lox, and cream cheese, too, if you take yours with a schmear. Life's too short to eat those doughy things other bakeries have the effrontery to call bagels.

BAKERY, BREADS
Iggy's Breads of the World
130 Fawcett St., Cambridge, 617-491-7600
www.iggysbread.com

Iggy's has achieved truly iconic status as Boston's natural bakers extraordinaire. It's not just the tasty end product, but also the company's integrity, using and promoting local and organic ingredients in its yummy breads and buns. Like-minded restaurateurs (as well as those who just want a darn good loaf) swear by them, and discerning retailers like Whole Foods carry their products. During summer months, Iggy's preservative-free breads are available at the Copley Square farmers market as well as the Atlantic Avenue and Dewey Square markets. But wherever you get them, load up on whole-wheat bagels (even the folks at H&H would approve), croissants brushed with organic egg glaze, ciabatta made from unbleached flour and fresh baguettes. Forget Wonder Bread. This is wonderful bread.

BAKERY, CAKES
Rosie's Bakery
243 Hampshire St., Cambridge, 617-491-9488; additional locations in Boston, Cambridge, Chestnut Hill, Lexington and elsewhere; www.rosiesbakery.com

With all the carb watching, calorie burning and health food munching, you sometimes just need to splurge on a good piece of cake (or even a whole one). And Rosie's doesn't skimp on the good stuff: Creamery butter, rich chocolate, fresh cream and pure cane sugar are the main ingredients. You'd have to use such rich components to create delicacies with names like the "chocolate orgasm." Luscious Boston crème pie is light, golden sponge cake filled with custard and glazed in chocolate ganache with chocolate curls. While other cakes can be lovely to look at but disappointing to taste, Rosie's backs up the pretty presentation with flavor to match.

BAKERY, SWEETS
Clear Flour Bread
178 Thorndike St., Brookline, 617-739-0060
www.clearflourbread.com

It's a rare Saturday morning that the line at Clear Flour doesn't extend out the door and around the corner. Local Francophiles know that this is the place for authentic-tasting croissants, currant-studded scones and seasonal fruit tarts to rival any recipe in Larousse—all handmade from scratch. Other favorites include warm sticky buns (with or without nuts), which Clear Flour calls "morning buns" to remind you that these cinnamon-swirled yummies sell out before lunchtime. And be sure to try the Scharffen Berger triple-chocolate cookie with walnuts—a masterpiece of soft, sweet and gooey, it'll ruin you for any other chocolate chip cookie.

HIDDEN GEM

Restaurant L

4 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-266-4680, www.louisboston.com

Tucked into the bottom floor of Louis Boston, this well-reviewed but little-known lunch and dinner spot is one of the truly exciting places to eat in the city. Chef Pino Maffeo's cutting-edge menu treads a fine line between Asian influences and deconstructed Spanish, but flavor is never sacrificed on the altar of style. The room is modern and uncluttered, the staff cheerfully helps you navigate the menu and the wine selection is extensive for a relatively small restaurant. Once you discover it, you'll have trouble keeping the secret to yourself.

pick up a feedbag for four or supper for six. Ain't thin' else north of the Mason-Dixon Line this tasty.

BISTRO

Sandrine's

Holyoke St., Cambridge, 617-497-5300, www.sandrines.com

lsace, a tiny French province bordering Germany, boasts unique culinary tradition that many Americans mistakly lump into the general category of "French food." Altian cooking employs strong, rustic flavors and none of e prissiness of haute cuisine. At Sandrine's, chef Rayond Ost (an Alsatian native) serves the classic dishes of s birthplace like choucroute—a surprisingly delicate deght that features smoked pork and sausage—and a asted rack of lamb encrusted with powerful mustard. Ost anages a large menu with grace, even including several earty vegetarian offerings, and the restaurant's deep, cavernous space is used to its best advantage to showcase the unique flavors of Alsace. Debunking the myth that good French restaurants are stuffy and pretentious, the staff at Sandrine's goes out of its way to be welcoming and accommodating. What are you waiting for? Allez-y.

BREAKFAST

Sound Bites Café

708 Broadway, Somerville, 617-623-8338

With a staff of only nine people, Sound Bites is the little engine that could of the Boston breakfast world. The restaurant opens at 7 am for the on-their-way-to-work crowd, serving up the best French toast, pancakes, waffles, omelets and fresh fruit in town. The smell of bacon cooking on the grill will instantly get your stomach grumbling, and you won't be able to concentrate on a word on the menu until you order. It's well worth the wait, and you can order a cup of coffee while anticipating your feast. Owner Yasser Mirza has a no-nonsense attitude, and with only 14 tables and a line trailing out the door, you can't blame him. A leisurely meal is frowned upon, but it doesn't matter since you'll want to wolf down that French toast stuffed with fresh goat cheese and pears, and gulp that bottomless cup o' joe.

BRUNCH

Union Bar and Grille

1357 Washington St., Boston, 617-423-0555

www.unionrestaurant.com

Nowadays, the term "brunch" is a euphemism for hangover food: a morning-after meal for the thousands of bleary-eyed students and young professionals hoping to assuage their angry livers with a heavy dose of grease. This upscale South End bistro, however, takes brunch seriously, offering refined items like eggs Benedict with smoked salmon. With its elegant décor and tall windows overlooking Washington Street, the atmosphere is luxurious, yet prices are lower than you'd pay at more-hyped brunch spots. And for those who do need a little hair of the dog, a hefty drink list includes tasty house specials along with the classic Bloody Mary and mimosa. A perfectly civilized way to start off any weekend morning.

BURGER

R.F. O'Sullivan and Son

282 Beacon St., Somerville, 617-492-7773, www.rfosullivan.com

It doesn't look like much from the outside. Actually, it doesn't look like much on the inside, either—just your average neighborhood bar with an average Irish name. But what gets the big thumbs-up at Sully's are the half-pound burgers, grilled to perfection and available with your choice of more than a dozen toppings. The secret here isn't just what sits atop the meat. It's also the preparation: A cook forms the ground beef into round balls and grills them without flattening them into a conventional patty shape (McDonald's this ain't), meaning more of the natural juices are locked in. The result is a truly succulent hamburger. One caveat: These burgers are impossible to eat gracefully. Just use two hands, open wide and enjoy.

BURRITOS

Anna's Taqueria

1412 Beacon St., Brookline, 617-739-7300; additional locations in Brookline, Cambridge and Somerville

Why settle for a plain old burrito when you can go for a superb burrito, or better still, a "super" burrito? The folks at every outpost of Anna's Taqueria—the first opened in Coolidge Corner in 1995, and since then they've opened a second location in Brookline, as well as spots in Somerville and Cambridge—understand the subtle alchemy that goes into making the sublime Mexican staple. Starting at less than $4, there might not be a cheaper meal around Boston than Anna's classic burrito, a supple flour tortilla generously stuffed with beans and marinated meat or grilled veggies. And on those occasions when you need to really tie on the feedbag, the "super" burrito takes it one step further, offering a gargantuan tortilla crammed with beans, rice, cheese and whatever other fillings whet your appetite (hint: the guacamole's spectacular). What's more, the swiftness with which Anna's efficient crew moves your burrito through the assembly line, hastening its arrival in your hands, will make you want to cry tears of joy. Regular or grande, Anna's has it all wrapped up.

CHEAP EATS

Dok Bua Thai Kitchen

411 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-232-2955

www.dokbuathai.com

This authentic Thai cuisine is tops when it comes to a satisfying meal at an appealing price, particularly the daily dinner special available until 10:30 pm. All your favorites are here, as well as some dishes you might never have heard of but are well-advised to try. And at these prices, there's no point in skimping; you can enjoy entrées like red curry and pad-bai-gra-pow, along with rice, soup, vegetable egg rolls and steamed pork dumplings, all for less than $10. Unlike many spit-and-polish cheap eats joints, this is no dingy hole in the wall. Attractively decorated, it employs a friendly staff who genuinely seem to have nothing but your dining pleasure in mind. All of which means you'll leave with your wallet intact and a smile on your face.

www.formaggiokitchen.com

Filled with delicacies from everywhere you've never heard of, Formaggio hand-selects only the finest goods from the most skilled producers in the most far-flung corners of the world. For example, owners Ihsan and Valerie Gurdal and store manager Robert Aguilera have schlepped to a dairy farm in Jura, France, where they personally selected the wheels of compte that would join their artisanal cheese selection, and other voyages have taken them to Extremadura in Spain and the Veneto in Italy. In addition to the finest cheeses in the world, the treasures they bring back include handma sweets, honey, exotic nuts and hard-to-find spices a salts. Proprietors of the first cheese cave in the U. they've built a bit of Old World culinary culture int basement below Huron Avenue, and they've since e panded into a space on Shawmut in the South En

AMERICAN

The Franklin Cafe

278 Shawmut Ave., Boston, 617-350-0010, www.franklincafe.com

At the same time that Boston's fine-dining revolution was taking hold, the Franklin Cafe was already promoting another—and now more popular—approach to eating out: neighborhood bistro dining. At 10 years old, the moderately priced Franklin (which has a younger sibling of the same name in Gloucester) is the favorite drop-in for South Enders and others-about-town who simply want a hip, casual and lively atmosphere with great food. The Franklin's famous for its trademark roasted turkey meatloaf with spiced-fig gravy, and the happening bar scene is built around supersoothing, life-is-grand cocktails. Best of all, the kitchen serves its savvy American staples and bistro classics until 1:30 every night, making it a popular roost for hungry night owls.

CHINESE
Bernard's

199 Boylston St., Newton, 617-969-3388

www.bernardscg.com

This is the place where every discerning lover of Chinese cuisine goes for way-beyond lo mein. Owned by the affable Bernard Leung, who oversees things in the kitchen with a scary attention to detail, it actually lives up to the overused phrase "gourmet Chinese food." Dishes like stuffed eggplant, salt and pepper calamari and steamed sea bass will broaden the horizons of those used to pedestrian Chinese fare, and old favorites like barbecued spare ribs, Peking duck and won ton soup will seem like a revelation. (We can't count the number of times we've overheard, "So this is what crab Rangoon is supposed to taste like!") Even in China, it's hard to find good Chinese food, but in Boston, you needn't go farther than the Mall at Chestnut Hill.

COFFEE SHOP
Café Pamplona

12 Bow St., Cambridge, 617-492-0352

As Harvard Square becomes ever more Mall of America, only traces of its former, haute-bohemian self remain. Café Pamplona, which sits tucked off the main Mass. Ave. drag at the intersection of Bow and Arrow streets, is a veritable icon of Cambridge's funky glory days. It even has a Wikipedia page, which recounts its history since opening in 1958 as the first café in the Square—and it's reputed to have had the first espresso machine in the city. Pamplona still produces a superlative cup of joe, which can be enjoyed with delicious desserts or grilled Cubanos (toasted sandwiches filled with ham, pork and cheese). And it still has the artsy-intellectual vibe reminiscent of a Left Bank artists' haunt. Not that Pamplona capitalizes on notoriety; its discreet charm is what gives this dowager her mystique.

COMFORT FOOD
Silvertone Bar & Grill

69 Bromfield St., Boston, 617-338-7887

Can't remember the last time you sat down for some home cooking? Tucked away in Downtown Crossing, Silvertone is where the in-the-know go for hearty, old-fashioned food surrounded by a lively and boisterous crowd. Homestyle faves like meatloaf and cheesy mac are best enjoyed late at night in a dimly-lit booth, while fancy touches, like a signature raspberry-infused vodka martini, up the cool quotient. But the food, along with the excellent wine list, remains eminently affordable. The high-back booths and wood seating at the bar complement the cozy, subterranean interior, and the antique radios, vintage liquor posters and old photos create a comforting,

AFTER-HOURS DINING

South Street Diner

178 Kneeland St., Boston, 617-350-0028

www.southstreetdiner.com

For 10 years now, this greasy spoon has dominated the late-night dining scene in the Leather District. A favorite of party people, shift workers and insomniacs alike, it's open 24 hours a day from Thursday evening to Monday morning (on school nights, it closes at 5 am to allow employees and local residents a few z's). Along with traditional comfort food — pancake-laden breakfast plates, burgers, steak tips — and great specials, the menu also features thick, creamy, '50s-style frappes. But as much as the grub, what keeps the sleep-deprived coming back for more are the welcoming staff and equally agreeable prices.

TRIP TO PARIS FOR UNDER $100

Petit Robert Bistro

368 Comm. Ave., Boston, 617-375-0699, www.petitrobertbistro.com

Sacré bleu! A French restaurant where the baguettes are crusty, but the waiters aren't! We gnashed our teeth and tore our garments when the legendary Maison Robert closed, but chef Jackie Robert is back and better than ever with this cozy little bistro, which serves up all your French favorites (duck confit, bouillabaisse and pommes frites) as well as more unusual dishes (Petit calf's liver and tripe Provençale). For dessert, pastry chef Kristen Lawson concocts delicate options like lemon soufflé with blueberry compote and lime bacherin, as well as creative confections like the playful chocolate Eiffel Tower. But what we like best of all is Petit's price point. Decidedly un-Parisian, most entrées hover in the $17 range. Rare value for such exceptional food.

nostalgic feel. It's as if Donna Reed and Martha Stewart teamed up to open a clubhouse for the cool kids.

DELI

Zaftigs Delicatessen

335 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-975-0075, www.zaftigs.com

Turns out the little Jewish mother you never had has been the prize of Coolidge Corner for nine years. With an expansive menu offering breakfast all day, plus lunch and dinner, this family deli is always bustling with regulars. But remember: Jewish deli, yes; kosher, no, which means that along with all your favorites (corned beef, brisket, knishes, lox, etc.) you can enjoy trafe like ham, bacon and cheeseburgers. The large dining area seats 100, and the background music is decidedly retro. The menu, on the other hand, seems to be a little more modernized, with banana-stuffed French toast (on the all-day breakfast menu), and a smoked salmon quesadilla. Good luck choosing between a grilled Reuben and the corned beef—they're both deadly. And if you eat here often enough, you'll wind up looking like the pleasantly plump lady wearing a red dress on the front of the menus.

DIM SUM

Hei La Moon

88 Beach St., Boston, 617-338-8813

Chinatown offers many delights, but for the best dim sum, you'll have to walk under the gate and across the surface artery. Unlike its big sister, China Pearl, Hei La Moon sits on the "wrong side" of Chinatown's main drag (technically, it's in the Leather District). But why split hairs? The capacious space is good news at lunchtime, as dim sum is served daily until 3 pm and draws huge crowds chowing on staples like yellow pork buns and shrimp dumplings. On weekends the place is packed, with food-laden carts navigating the dining room like bumper cars, every seat in the place filled and hungry hordes waiting outside for their number to be called. Arrive early for the quickest seating and best selection.

DINER

Mike's City Diner

1714 Washington St., Boston, 617-267-9393

South End stalwart Mike's City Diner isn't quite a tin railroad car, but in every other respect it's classic. This storefront "luncheonette" has black-and-white checkered plastic tablecloths that fairly scream '50s, and the menu of solid American comfort food is served in rib-sticking portions. The meat-and-two-veg lunches (such as the beloved homemade meatloaf) and hearty breakfast plates are all created from better ingredients than at most greasy spoons, so while it's a no-fuss joint, the grub is good. Breakfast is served all day Sunday and draws a large and loyal bed-headed crowd jonesing for an eye-opening jolt of steaming joe and a heart-attack-on-a-plate to raise their blood sugar. As far as we're concerned, there are few ills that a big stack of fluffy pancakes can't cure.

FONDUE

Wine Cellar

30 Mass. Ave., Boston, 617-236-0080, www.bostoncellar.com

Outside of Switzerland, this is among the best fondue we've tasted. As a fad in this country, the communal Alpine dish hit its stride in the 1970s as a swinging dinner party option. Many burnt tongues and ruined sofas followed, and not surprisingly (given its open-flame nature in these risk-averse times), murmurs of a fondue revival have been exaggerated. But thankfully, the Back Bay's Wine Cellar embraced the tradition and has developed a cult following among fondue fanatics. In addition to a "normal" menu, revelers can dip into classic Swiss cheese fondue or choose from around 30 or so savory variations. Only the truly self-abnegating leave without trying the scrumptious chocolate dessert fondues. What's more, the Cellar's cozy atmosphere is just right for huddling intimately over those campfire-like pots.

Having made a name for himself at Kenmore Square's chic and delicious seafood spot Great Bay, Sewall has struck out on his own and opened his own place in Coolidge Corner (the name is a reference to the fact that one of his Yankee ancestors was a founder of Brookline). A short-lister and/or recipient of every major culinary honor over the last few years, he seems destined for a James Beard Award—or a show on the Food Network. In the meantime, we're glad he's serving up his delicious take on seasonal American cuisine (be sure to try the organic white grits) in a setting that's swanky but still cozy and comfortable.

FRENCH

L'Espalier

30 Gloucester St., Boston, 617-262-3023, www.lespalier.com

The perennial winner in this category is quite simply one of the finest restaurants in any American city. And while many tend to think of it as only a special-occasion destination, we'd eat there every night of the week if our waistlines (and our wallets) would allow it. Housed in a 19th-century Back Bay townhouse and designed by renowned interior decorator Celeste Cooper, the sumptuous surroundings are a fitting backdrop to the flawless food presented by chef-owner Frank McClelland. His cooking isn't strictly by-the-book French—the end result has a New England flair—yet the cheese board would impress even the sniffiest French foodie. So what if it's a tad on the pricey side? You'd have to fly across the Atlantic for food this good.

Gargoyles on the Square brings a sorely needed dose of posh noshing to the trendy expanse that is latter-day Davis Square. Yet it blends right into this lively neighborhood, with a bright decor and sensible prices. Always a safe bet, the food never bores. Imaginative, often luxurious dishes are prepared with an innovative American sensibility influenced by Asian cuisine. The consistent quality and sky-high deliciousness quotient start with the apps and continue through desserts that aren't an afterthought. And if you're more in the mood for a mellow bite, the bustling bar serves ravishingly good appetizers to go with killer tinis.

The Other Side Café

407 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-8437

Back in the day, mom and dad warned us about venturing over to the wrong side of the tracks, but we'll offer you no such caution when it comes to the Other Side Café (unless, of course, you're just plain scared of having fun). The restaurant's name refers to its location, on the side of Mass. Ave. away from the Newbury Street shops, but it also hints at the individualistic spirit that emerges in the menu (a variety of healthful wraps, sandwiches and veggie options, fresh fruit juices and smoothies), the décor (dim lighting, two levels of contemporary-art-lined walls) and, of course, the selection of tunes. The music's loud, the attitude's laid back and there's nary an Izod polo or Coach purse in sight. Sometimes the other side of Newbury Street delivers a much needed break from the mainstream.

cies that are a cut above your average kebab. The dining room and bar are sleek, with a modern minimalist aesthetic, while the menu adds some oomph to traditional Greek cuisine with inventive and lavish updates on traditional mezethakia (appetizers), seafood and meat entrées. Your delicious dinner can be washed down with a bottle from their impressive cellar of superior Greek wines (Retsina fans will rejoice) followed, of course, by a shot of Ouzo or Metaxa. Lovers of grape leaves will become instant regulars, and for those with a sweet tooth, the desserts are simply wow, most notably an incredible honey-drenched baklava. The huge picture windows overlooking the Zakim Bridge offer a visual treat, and the only real reminder that this is Boston and not Patmos.

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL, BACK BAY

Mistral

223 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-867-9300

www.mistralbistro.com

The French have a genetic appreciation for food, and their reverence for it is seen in the worldwide culture of the French restaurant, a tradition into which Mistral fits beautifully. Sophisticated and stylish, Mistral's got excellent people-watching and a killer bar scene. But it's the world-class cuisine of chef-owner Jamie Mammano that keeps us coming back, even as trendy competitors open, peak and then close. Mistral's décor is urbane twist on traditional French chic, with soari ceilings set above arched floor-to-ceiling windows row of dwarf cypress trees lining the bar area, and warm, buttery tone to the walls. The irresistible me is comforting yet creative, and any appetite will well-served, whether you want to snack on its famo tuna tartare at the bar or sit down for three delicio courses. In the hundreds of times we've eaten here, never been anything but excellent.

COCKTAIL TREND

Pomegranate Martini

Cosmos, green apple and even the Key lime version are old news. Le dernier cri on the martini circuit is one served with the juice of that oh-so-healthy fruit, the pomegranate. A little sweet, refreshingly robust and packed with powerful antioxidants, pom is leading the pack these days. Establishments from the Parish Café (pomegranate juice, simple syrup, Stoli O, Cointreau and lime juice) to 33 (Ketel One Citron, Cointreau, pomegranate juice and a splash of lime juice) are getting in on the craze. Also look for it at Via Matta, Cottonwood, Union Bar and Grille, Avila, Bonfire, Mantra and the Living Room. All hail big red!

ICE CREAM

J.P. Licks

659 Centre St., Jamaica Plain, 617-524-6740; additional locations in Boston, Brookline, Newton, Somerville and elsewhere; www.jplicks.com

For a solid 25 years, we Bostonians have been loving J.P. Licks—for not getting rid of our favorite flavors, and for supplying us with a never-ending roster of new ones like the inventive Cow Trax (sweet cream ice cream with fudge swirls, peanut butter cups and chocolate chips) and Cherry Ortiz (formerly Cherry Garciaparra). If you're sticking to a diet, you can always listen to your conscience and go for the low fat fro yo, but the gooey sauces and crunchy candy toppings bring out the kid in all of us. Moo-ve over, Ben and Jerry. This place has you licked.

9 Park St., Boston, 617-742-9991, www.no9park.com

This elegant restaurant located on the first floor of townhouse overlooking Boston Common is where di cerning denizens of Beacon Hill go for an exquisite ep curean experience. The décor at this intimate Europea scale eatery is timelessly elegant, featuring sepia print dark wood floors and Italian marble tables in the café ar white linen tablecloths in the dining room. The service equally impeccable. But chef-owner Barbara Lynch's r fined cuisine steals the show, weaving together the pe ished flavors of Italian and French cooking to produ dishes that are simple yet sumptuous in flavor, textu and presentation. Heavenly appetizers and entrées i clude a light, prune-stuffed gnocchi topped with foie gr in a vin santo glaze, and Lynch's signature roasted squa Desserts such as tarte au chocolat and espresso creamsic provide an exciting finish, and seductive potions are spi on classics like the hot toddy and mint julep. Pomodoro

24 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-566-4455

Pomodoro is a taste of the North End in Brookline Vi lage. That's because it's the sibling of the superb Nort End restaurant of the same name (and also of the belov Irish tavern, Matt Murphy's, nearby in Brookline). D spite it's tomato-y name, Pomodoro ditches the standa red-sauce recipes for modern Italian fare served in charming, convivial atmosphere. Favorites include th crispy calamari with a housemade vinegar-pepper sauce, rock shrimp bruschetta with pesto, and seafood fra diabl Doing double duty as both neighborhood eatery and dest nation restaurant, Pomodoro satisfies diners looking for romantic dinner or just a casual meal at the bar. Why de with scary North End parking or a valet when you can z over to Brookline Village?

Craigie Street's chef, Tony Maws, was named by Food a Wine magazine as one of America's best new chefs la year, and we wholeheartedly agree. He creates an entire new menu every day with fresh, (mostly) organic ingred ents, turning out amazing dishes like the sublime crisp skinned roast chicken—all at reasonable prices. If you' feeling adventurous (and we mean adventurous), swi by after 9 pm on a Wednesday or Sunday for Chef Whim night, when there's no menu—just whatev strikes Maws' fancy. On a recent night we devoured a c quillage of curry-poached cod cheeks with oyster emu sion; blood sausage topped with an egg; a quatre fois te rine of four different livers, including rabbit; and so milk panna cotta with candied fennel and pineapple. Er bodying the best reasons to visit France, this unassumi spot serves up surprisingly serious food.

grill and stove in an open kitchen. Innovative dishes include black truffle flan and an asparagus tart, plus some of the most decadent chocolate concoctions in town. (The falling chocolate cake is the ideal denouement.) The lengthy wine list can easily be enjoyed at the bar or in the jam-packed dining room, where knowledgeable waiters seem to dance through the congenial crowd. Ashmont Grill

555 Talbot Ave., Dorchester, 617-825-4300

www.ashmontgrill.com

You know that when people from Newton, Weston and Wellesley are driving into Dorchester for dinner, something's up. In this case, it's the stand-out restaurant that Chris Douglass (of the South End landmark Icarus) opened in his own neighborhood. The swanky interior, accented in tones of rich yellow and cool greyish-blue, is Brooklyn-level hip, while the menu is heavy on American classics—Caesar salad, gourmet pizzas, steaks and pulled pork—but prepared so superbly they're a revelation. Best of all, the downtown food is served at suburban prices, with a wine list to match. Our only complaint is that they don't accept reservations.

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL, DOWNTOWN/FINANCIAL DISTRICT

Radius

8 High St., Boston, 617-426-1234, www.radiusrestaurant.com

Radius' circular dining room is one of the sexiest in Boston, with food to match. The menu offers a modern tour of France, featuring a lighter style of cuisine that emphasizes seasonal ingredients and traditional preparation. The dishes are exquisitely prepared but still have fanciful touches: The ahi tuna comes with lotus root chip and chilled cucumber water; the roasted breast of squab shares a plate with corn, smoked bacon, green onion, summer truffle and sherry. Like the ambiance, the drink list is stylish and sleek, and you'd be hard-pressed to find a wine list better than this one. The posh bar coolly mixes high and low tables in silver and black, and has crème couches that are brightened by romantic lighting. From the second you step beneath the red awning, you're guaranteed an enchanted evening.

Douzo

31 Dartmouth St., Boston, 617-859-8886

First of all, the name rhymes with Bozo. Second of all, the buzz is entirely deserved. The decor—two tiers of comfortable yet streamlined contemporary design with a bar overlooking a double-height dining area—is to die for, and the sushi (as well as everything from the kitchen) would earn high praise in Tokyo. The bar scene is lively, even if you're not drinking. And the staff is courteous without being obsequious, attentive without hovering. Owned by Jack Huang (one of the former partners at the Brookline maki mecca Fugakyu), this newest addition to the sadly sparse constellation of good sushi spots in Boston outshines them all. Nobu, shmobu.

PRE-THEATER DINING

Teatro

77 Tremont St., Boston, 617-778-6841, www.teatroboston.com

This gorgeous restaurant has a barrel-vaulted ceiling with gold beaux arts plasterwork, complemented by soothing, robin's egg–blue interior. Chef Jamie Mammano's superb take on traditional Italian cuisine is equally lovely. The Bolognese ragout is as good as anything you'll find in Rome, while the antipasto is a great appetizer for sharing. In fact, you'll want to share everything, since the portions are large enough and there isn't a thing on the menu that isn't outstanding. The staff is sensitive to curtain times and will ensure a relaxed, delightful and relatively inexpensive meal before the show—which you'll doubly appreciate once you see how much tickets cost these days.

were mighty big shoes to fill, but Krista Kranyak, a former partner in Perdix, hasn't noticeably broken a sweat, enchanting neighbors and visitors alike with a classical French menu that uses local, mostly organic meats, fish and produce. New chef David Punch, formerly of the Nightingale and UpStairs on the Square, and most recently Rendezvous in Central Square, joined in April and his commitment to flavorful, nonchemically-treated ingredients is equaled only by Kranyak's dedication to the comfort of the customers who fill the cozy dining room nightly. Although still a relative newcomer to the scene, Ten Tables already rates a perfect… well, you know.

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL, NORTH END

Prezza

24 Fleet St., Boston, 617-227-1577, www.prezza.com

Situated in a part of Boston that's known for great Italian food, Prezza still manages to shine brighter than the competition. Not only has it become a destination worthy of navigating cramped North End streets for a parking spot, it stands out even when stacked up against the best restaurants in other parts of the city. Chef-owner Anthony Caturano has an adventurous streak and an intrinsic grasp of Italian cuisine, a powerful combination that yields robust flavors expertly mixed and matched in earthy, pungent dishes. The setting is charming, too, with unfussy beiges and elbowroom you don't often find in a space that's pure urban chic.

The food at Stella is as good as it gets outside of a certain boot-shaped European country, while the décor brings a welcome dash of South Beach to the heart of the South End. Chef-owner Evan Deluty makes carbs worth it with his classic pasta dishes, and GM Damien Palladino runs a tight ship with a crew that provides impeccable service. To top it off, the people-watching is unsurpassed, as the place attracts a uniformly attractive and fashionable clientele to its sleek, white dining room and bar. Generous patio seating makes it ideal for starry night dinners and summer brunch on Sundays. In short, it's Italian in all the best ways: gorgeous, delicious and stylish in every detail.

What was wrong with the Wrap? It was straightforward and simple, letting you know what to expect. With their new name, this lunchtime or on-the-fly standby (which still serves delicious and healthful alternatives to fast food) could be selling anything from chimichangas to car parts. OK, so we get the fact that wraps are sandwiches packaged as burritos. But why the need for a Spanglish-y name when the old one explained exactly what they were selling? If this were Intro to Marketing, we'd have to give them an F.

CASUAL DINING

Orinoco

477 Shawmut Ave., Boston, 617-369-7075, www.orinocokitchen.com

Named for the river in South America, this Venezuelan gem became one of the most popular South End dining destinations the moment it opened. Short of a jaunt to Caracas, you won't taste empanadas or arepas (traditional Venezuelan cornbread sandwiches) this good. Simply looking at Orinoco's menu makes your mouth water: guayanes cheese wrapped in flaky dough and served with chipotle ketchup, queso paisa wrapped in sweet plantains, and bacon-wrapped, almond-filled dates. Owner and all-around-nice-guy Andres Branger, along with stellar chef Carlos Rodriguez, has re-created a little slice of his native country, and the South End has responded by packing the restaurant every night. Don't leave without trying the molten chocolate cake, because the best really is last.

Ev though it's designed to protect the foodstuffs, the m thought of someone else's germs hurtling toward the lett can be enough to turn us off. But to our delight, this pr lem has been solved by the café at the Sports Club/L where customers choose their own ingredients and hav scrupulously clean chef assemble the salad for them. MARGARITA

Cactus Club

www.cactusclubboston.com

The classic mix of tequila, triple sec and fresh lime juice has come a long way and taken some intriguing turns. Some people like to go highbrow with Cointreau or Grand Marnier instead of triple sec; some like theirs frozen; some prefer a fruity, frou-frou margarita; and some like aged tequilas for an extra agave kick. However you like the national cocktail of our neighbor to the South—and let's face it, when you're in the mood for margaritas, nothing else will do—the Cactus Club is the place in Beantown. It's the house specialty, and that means one thing: You can count on your fellow barflies sucking down the loco juice, too, and everybody's speaking the same language.

The Oak Bar at the Fairmont Copley Plaza

138 St. James Ave., Boston, 617-267-5300

www.theoakroom.com

E.B. White called it "the elixir of quietude," and this king of cocktails has been enjoyed for many years as the quintessential tipple of business executives. Soaking in the majestic grandeur of the Oak Bar at the Fairmont Copley Plaza, fat cats enjoy a relaxing drink while sipping on a martini from one of Boston's largest martini lists. If you're not there on business, it's a romantic place to try the Honey Suckle (Bacardi light rum, honey, lemon juice and a splash of fresh-squeezed OJ, with a sprig of mint). Purists who insist that a martini is nothing more than gin with a whiff of vermouth, however, can order a drink as classic as an F. Scott Fitzgerald novel. In other words, it's the perfect setting in which to indulge in an ice cold bucket of loudmouth soup.

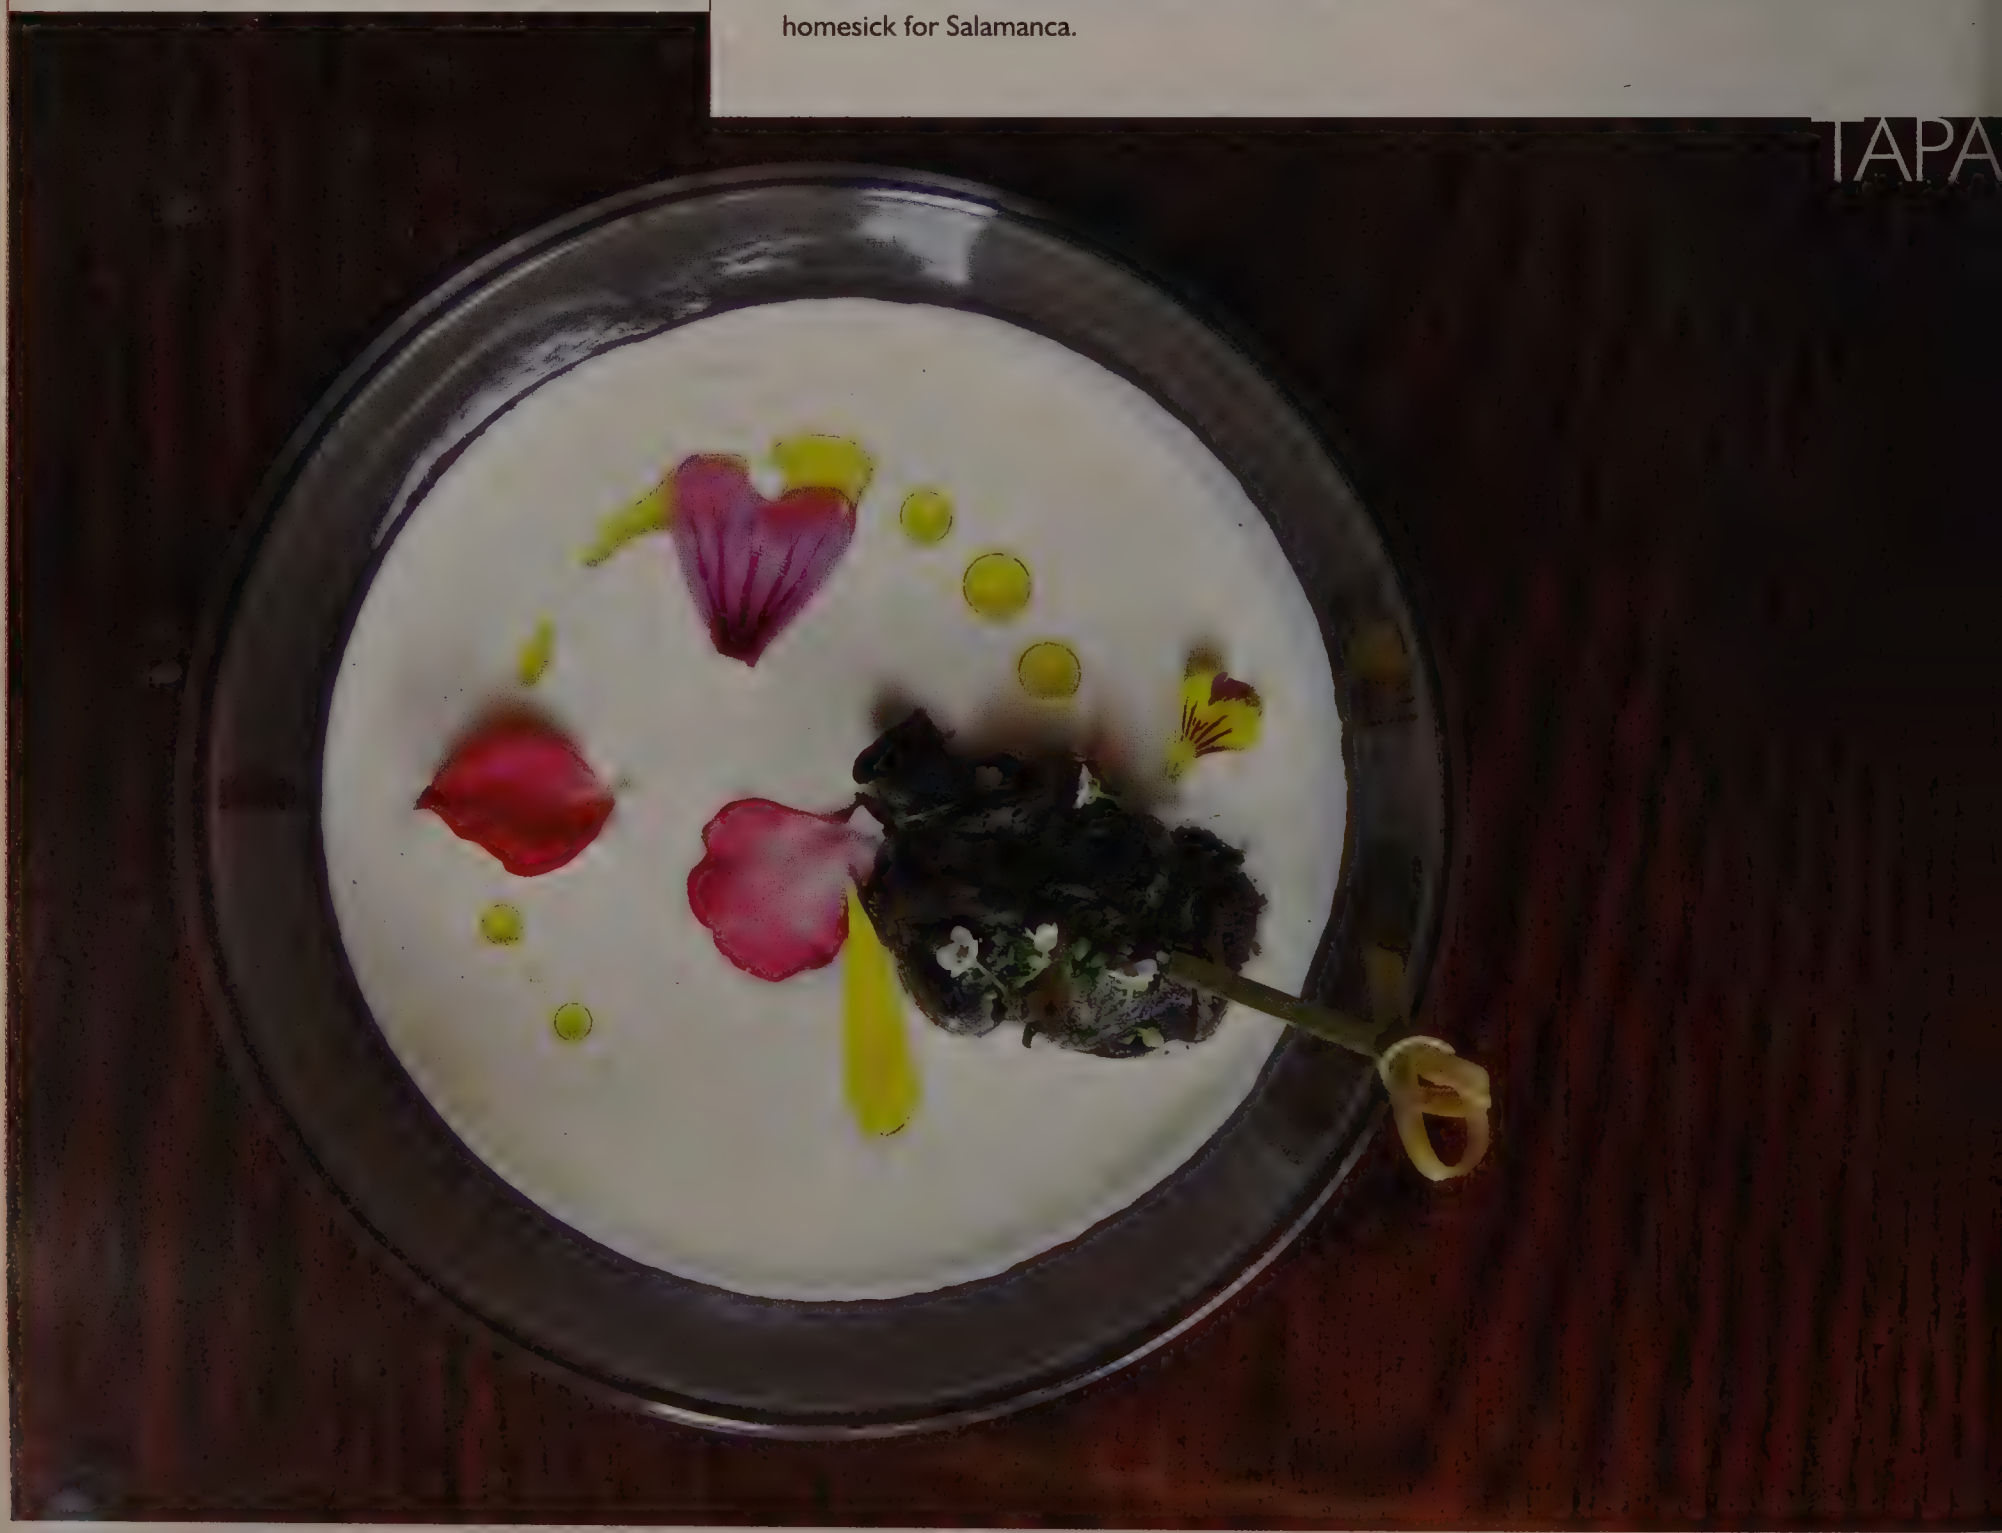
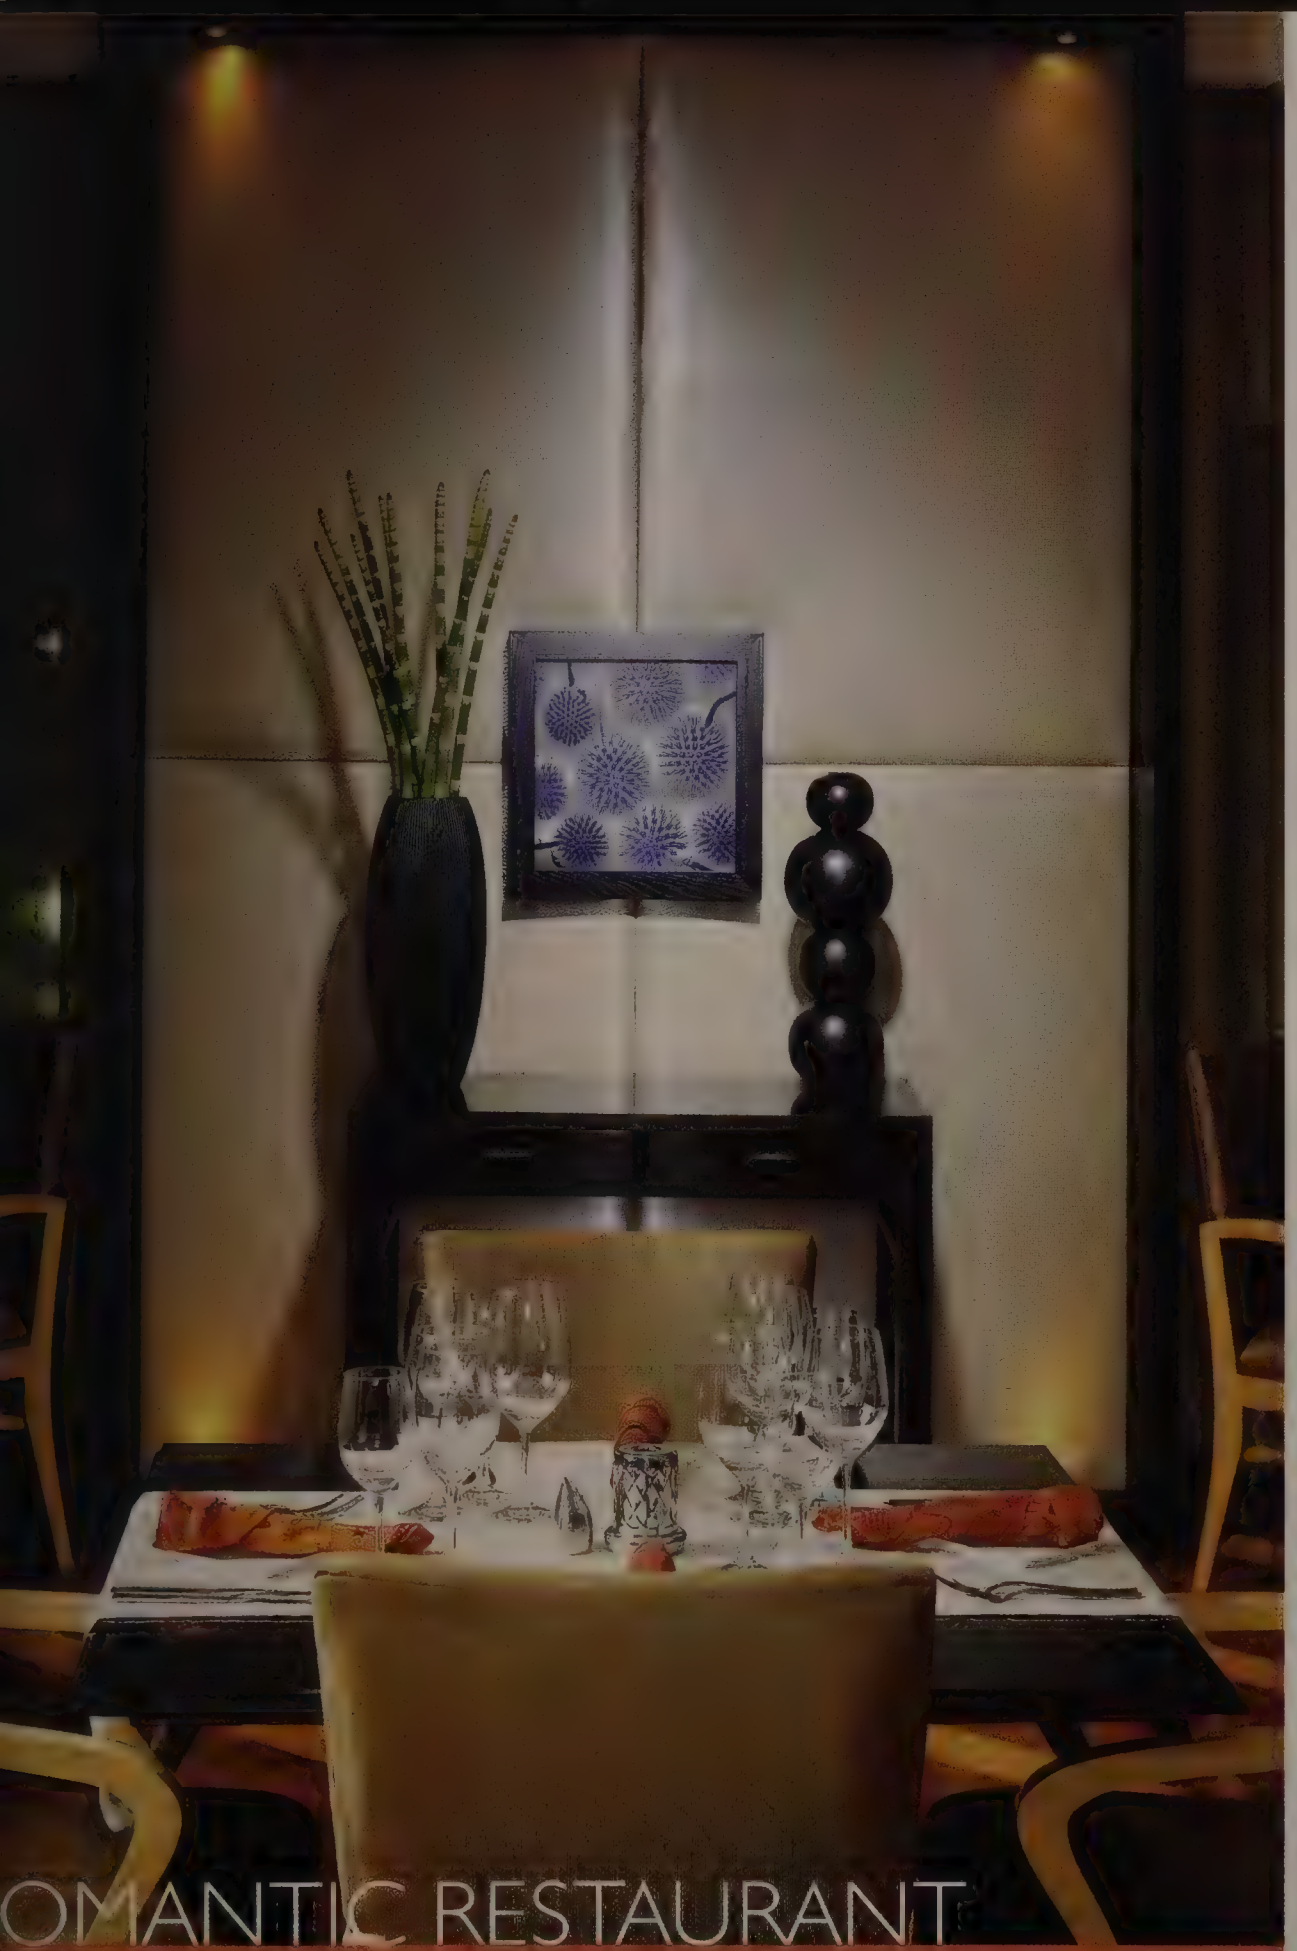
1704 Washington St., Boston, 617-536-4300

Chef-owner Ken Oringer has hit another home run; in fact, we like this warm and lively place even more than his award-winning Clio and Uni. The spartan South End Spanish restaurant consists of a long bar, two large communal tables that can seat up to 10, some two- and four-tops, and eight newly added outdoor tables, all of which are constantly full—and no wonder. The food, a blend of traditional dishes and slight flights of fancy, is outstanding. A glass of the house red or sangria will ease the wait and give you time to peruse the selection of savory small dishes meant to be shared (a fact that makes it a sexy place for a date). It's enough to make one transplanted Spaniard we know homesick for Salamanca.





ROMANTIC RESTAURANT

Meritage at the Boston Harbor Hotel

70 Rowes Wharf, Boston, 617-439-3995, www.meritagetherestaurant.com

For such a memorable restaurant, it always seems to slip people's minds, which makes it a wonderful place to slip away for a night of intimate dining. The dining room, which overlooks the Harbor, is modish, and the seasonal cuisine of chef Daniel Bruce (he of wild-mushroom-picking fame) is consistently superb. Everything on the menu is matched to the primary characteristics of wine (hence the name, which refers to a blend of grapes made in the style of Bordeaux). What could be more romantic than that? The desserts are an ideal prelude to a little amour, and if you can't wait to get home, you can always check into one of the hotel rooms upstairs.

companied by a slug of Tu y Yo's cactus juice. We're uncommonly fond of the huevos divorciados, named for the way the eggs are separated by the hot red and green sauce. It's one heck of a colorful kickoff to the day, and the place to bring that friend who constantly complains that there's no good Mexican food in Boston. If the food doesn't shut him up, the sangria will.

ITALIAN

Mare

135 Richmond St., Boston, 617-723-6273

www.mareorganic.com

Restaurateur Frank De Pasquale, who already has a long list of popular restaurants to his name, opened this Italian joint, along with chef Marisa Iocco, in June of last year. And even though Iocco has recently departed, we have faith that new executive chef Isaac Kaufman, who's been at Mare since its opening and spent the previous year working under Todd English at Olives, is ready to carry the torch of greatness. As you'd expect from the name, Mare's menu leans heavily toward seafood (all sourced from the purest and cleanest waters), with excellent choices like a seafood antipasto or traditional Neapolitan pasta with a lobster ragout and crab meatballs. They use organic and locally grown ingredients, right down to their flour, milk and beer. And at $75 for five courses or $95 for seven courses (with wine pairings available), the tastings are among the best dining deals in the city. Mangia!

The Butcher Shop

Sure, the concept sounds precious—it's a French-style butchery and it's a full-service restaurant!—but Barbara Lynch's South End meat mart continues to get the job done for area oenophiles. Sitting at a soapstone bar and watching passers-by on Tremont Street, diners munch on entrées prepared with fresh, locally raised meats (the menu changes daily), accompanied by wine selected from a large, eclectic list. The intimate space gives off a casual, funky vibe, and when the bar is crowded (and believe us, this place sees action from lunchtime to the end of the night), it's easy to strike up conversation with a fellow imbiber. Epicures and wine lovers of all stripes will be glad to pull up a seat.

Both the flavor and texture are perfection, makin for one supremely silky taste bud–tickler. The restaurant itself, situated on the North End's main drag, is Boston's oldest and most authentically Old World coffee house. terpoint to the superb Italian food. Menu items ranging from a maccheroncelli (American Kobe beef meatballs, barolo sauce and pecorino Toscana) to an angus ribeye to sides like truffled French fries are all stand-outs, and the wine list (heavy on Italians and well-priced) is both excellent and well-tailored to the food. A vibrant bar scene rounds out the buzz-worthy atmosphere, as evidenced by the difficulty of scoring a reservation. But don't stop trying. This place is well worth the effort.

OLD WORLD DINING

Locke-Ober

3 Winter Place, Boston, 617-542-1340

www.locke-ober.com

A beloved Boston landmark, it's one of the oldest restaurants in the country; generations of power-brokers and political players have eaten lunch and dinner in the storied dining room with its elaborate silver service and hand-tooled leather ceiling. Celebrity chef–owner Lydia Shire has given both the space and the menu a thoughtful (and much-needed) update, while retaining classics like the lobster stew (a favorite of JFK) and the raw bar. Upstairs are private rooms where some of the more significant (and racy) episodes in Boston history took place. Our only complaint is that the adjoining private nightclub, Yvonnes, hasn't reopened.

OUTDOOR DINING

Oleana

134 Hampshire St., Cambridge, 617-661-0505

www.oleanarestaurant.com

The garden patio at this stunning and deservedly lionized Cambridge restaurant offers one of the prettiest dining experiences we've ever had, evocative of an enchanted oasis somewhere on the coast of North Africa. Chef-owner Ana Sortun creates exquisite pan-Mediterranean cuisine—heavily Turkish but with Italian and Spanish elements as well—employing unusual spice combinations that create some memorable meals. (Not surprisingly, she was a James Beard Award winner last year.) Between the charming setting and the delicious food, it's hard to beat Oleana's garden for a romantic summer date. Al fresco dining at its very best.

PEOPLE WATCHING

Armani Café

214 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-0909

Few thoroughfares in Boston offer more mesmerizing people watching than Newbury Street, and amid its many restaurant patios, Armani Café is king. Situated about halfway down the street between Exeter and Fairfield streets, there's no better spot in the city to pull up a chair under the shade of a huge white umbrella, order a cold drink and a bite to eat, and watch life's rich pageant pass by. (In fact, forget the people. The parade of shiny new exotics that pull up to the valet are alone worth waiting for a patio seat.) In addition to serving light refreshments for afternoon noshing, the Armani offers very good (seriously) Italian entrées, sweet desserts and espresso drinks. The food will cost you, but you can't beat the price for the entertainment.

Its rumptious lunch is served in the sumptuous surround-igs of the Bristol Lounge, where you can sink into a sh banquette and enjoy a spectacular view of the Pub-c Garden through floor-to-ceiling windows. The laine lobster roll, made with lemon mayonnaise, omes with Bibb lettuce on a brioche bun served with veet corn and leek soup and a slice of watermelon. PREPARED FOODS
Whole Foods

www.wholefoods.com

What began as a deli with a few cold cuts and premade alads has evolved into the "Prepared Foods Depart-ent"—a lively, warm and appetizing part of the store owcasing the creativity and culinary talents of a crack am of chefs. Whole Foods offers an ever-changing vari-y of quick entrées, side dishes, soups, rotisserie grilled items, sushi and sandwiches—all made with natural in-gredients. One measure of its quality is how busy it gets, especially around lunch and dinner. An excellent alter-native to burger joints and corporate cafeterias, the tasty and healthful fare includes dishes like low-fat fiesta rice, earthy quinoa and couscous salad, and tangy sesame-crusted salmon. It's not fast food; it's good food that cus-tomers can pick up quickly.

RAW BAR
Neptune Oyster
63 Salem St., Boston, 617-742-3474
www.neptuneoyster.com

If you thought all the North End had to offer was Italian food, think again. This wildly popular raw bar is tiny, so it gets crowded fast, but hey—oysters are an aphrodisiac, right? There are other seafood delicacies and dishes to please the non-seafood eater as well, but the constantly changing selection of bivalves will send those who like all things briny over the moon. The brainchild of long-time Olives presence Jeff Nace and his wife, Kelli, the restaurant is a cozy nook where a bust of Neptune looks down on patrons sampling his delights. It's the type of place that out-of-towners assume Boston is full of (but unfortunately isn't), and it's an absolute gem—or in this case, a pearl.

SANDWICHES

Don't let the big Busch beer sign fool you; although it serves beer, Darwin's Ltd. isn't a bar. Rather, it's a café whose Harvard Square outpost makes simply the best sandwiches on either side of the Charles. Inside, it feels like a charming country store that sells the most scrum-diddlyumptious comestibles and libations. The bright chalkboard menu lists fun creations inspired by local street names, like the "Mount Auburn"—a favorite made with smoked turkey, avocado, fresh veggies, vinaigrette and Swiss cheese. Order your sandwich on any of the nine different kinds of bread (take that, Dr. Atkins!), and finish it off with a gooey treat from Lakota Bakery. The cluttered but cozy space is domi-nated by boxy wooden shelves holding all sorts of nos-talgic dry goods for your pantry, and the baskets in the storefront windows overflow with fresh produce, mak-ing it literally a one-stop dining destination.

STEAK FRITES
Aquitaine
569 Tremont St., Boston, 617-424-8577
www.aquitaineboston.com

How French women don't get fat is a complete mystery to us, given that their food is so damn good. (Yeah, yeah, we read the book. We're still not buying it.) This bistro classic, which certainly isn't on any diet this side of the Atlantic, is so popular that it now seems to appear on every menu in town, but no restaurant in Boston does it as well as Aquitaine. The menu reads, "Steak frites with meat juices, perigord black truffle vinaigrette and watercress shallot salade," so it sounds like chef-owner Seth Woods knows what he's doing. In fact, even if you get a seat at one of the tables with a great view of Tremont Street, you'll be too focused on your plate to notice. Whether you call it steak frites or a sirloin with fries, Aquitaine's can't be beat.

STEAK TIPS
Amrheins
80 West Broadway, Boston, 617-268-6189
www.amrheinsboston.com

One of the oldest bars in Boston, Amrheins also claims to have the oldest hand-carved bar in America. After extensive renovations, this cherished landmark reopened last year, retaining everything we loved about the original but all brand-spanking-new, sparkling and spit-polished. It's tough to go from staunch tradition to thoroughly modern dining destination without losing friends, but Amrheins has been weathering change since 1890: Its name is German, meaning it predates the Irish takeover of Southie. For generations, it's been a South Boston stalwart, and thankfully the most recent update hasn't changed its character. One thing that keeps the faithful coming back for more is the lovingly cooked-to-order, succulent-and-then-some steak tips, nowadays served with any two sides, including fluffy jasmine rice, sautéed veggies and shallot mashed potatoes. The marinated sirloin tips are a taste of this Southie tradition that's not going anywhere anytime soon, and for that we're truly thankful.

STEAKHOUSE
Grill 23 & Bar
161 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-542-2255
www.grill23.com

The quintessential Boston steakhouse, Grill 23's location in the historic Salada Tea building gives it the traditional masculine feel of a private gentleman's club. The main menu changes weekly, but the selection of prime, all-natural, dry-aged steaks is its raison d'être. Other surefire bets are the Nantucket clam chowder and crispy sashimi-quality tuna. You can't go wrong with sides like tobacco onions, blue cheese mashed potatoes or truffled tater tots to complement your cut. For those averse to red meat, the seafood options are sublime, and for those who still have room (somehow) after the main course, hefty, steakhouse-sized desserts like s'more de crème and the espresso truffle cheesecake are a gut-busting must. The Kobe beef steaks are deservedly popular, and the lamb chops are as good as they get. Simply put, it's the best place in the city to be a carnivore.

Baraka Café

Boy, oh boy, is Baraka good. And good to the last drop, too. This Algerian twist on Mediterranean fare offers traditional North African cuisine in a homey space, just outside Central Square. Open-faced sandwiches served at lunch rest on hand-stretched, unleavened Berber bread. Fluffy couscous is steamed and served beneath rich stews, and the signature lemonade, flavored with orange essence, rose water and other spices, is a revelation—it's to Newman's Own as Dom Perignon is to 7-Up. There's much more to rave about, but—and it's a big pause here—the seven-spice flourless chocolate torte might just be the chocoholic's ultimate wet dream. The attention to detail is astounding, and the passion for creating wonderful food is obvious in every bite. Devilishly delicious.

BROOKLINE

Rod Dee

1430 Beacon St., Brookline, 617-738-4977; 94 Peterborough St., Boston, 617-859-0969; www.roddeethai.com

Praise for this tiny, bustling Thai delight is unanimous: Both the quality of the food and the reasonable prices make it a regular stop for hungry Brookliners. (Rod Dee's second location, in the Fenway, is just as good.) Whether you dine at one of the half-dozen tables or opt for take-out, the zingy Thai triumvirate of basil, chili and lemongrass punctuates several kinds of curry (red, green, yellow and massaman), any of which can be topped with seafood, meat or tofu. The som tum salad, which mixes shredded green papaya with dried shrimp in a spicy, sweet and sour lime-laced dressing, is superb; and the lyrical-sounding "luck samee long song" is a crispy-chicken lover's final rest stop. The namesake dish is moqueca, a Brazilian fish stew cooked in clay pots. Also popular are smoothies containing natural juices from exotic fruits grown in the Amazon rain forest—like antioxidant- and mineral-rich açaí, a cocoa relative called cupuaçú, the anti-inflammatory graviola and vitamin C–rich acerola. Delicioso!

JAMAICA PLAIN

Alex's Chimis

358 C Centre St., Jamaica Plain, 617-522-5201

This hole-in-the-wall take-out joint in Hyde Square does roasted meats—pork, chicken and beef—better than most places you've heard of. But word should soon start spreading a little more quickly: Alex's is undergoing an expansion to allow more than five customers in at a time. Ignore the "no English" cartoon on the wall—it's only partly true—and order up sides of rice, plantains and Dominican chimis, the island nation's meal on the run that's created with a special water bread bun and topped with a piquant sauce. But our favorite order is the rotisserie chicken. It's crispy on the outside, juicy where it counts and chopped into finger food–size portions with a machete-like blade while you wait.

Tucked just off Somerville Avenue, behind the Cumberland Farms and unfashionably east of Porter Square, Taqueria Lupita doesn't boast a big, alluring sign or a cute storefront view of tables filled with happily grazing customers. But it's well worth the trouble to hunt down for its cheap, authentic Salvadoran food, dished up with a welcoming smile and in huge portions. The gorditas al pastor are full of tender, succulent marinated pork, and the creamy horchata is the tastiest protein drink we've ever had. With heady aromas filling the air and a labyrinthine menu of exotic and wonderful ingredients to explore, Lupita does jus without any frills.

A welcoming neighborhood bar only steps away from Back Bay Station, Clerys is the spot where you're most likely to find that shy, conservative guy from the cubicle next to yours pounding whiskey shots and grinding on everyone—and everything—in sight. An all-around friendly, crowded, moderately priced watering hole, it also has three separate bars that make getting a drink easy, and the summer cocktail list features creative selections like the Razberri Lime Rickey, Watermelon Jolly Rancher or Tang (with Absolut Mandarin and triple sec). The menu offers standard pub food (burgers and wings) in addition to more upscale fare like sautéed mussels, a chicken pesto panini and butternut squash ravioli. There are plenty of bar tables, and it's easy to get sucked into the downstairs dancing scene, where DJs blast Top 40 and hip-hop three nights a week. But just remember that it's a weeknight before you order the infamous "one more martini."

12 LaGrange St., Boston, 617-292-2600

www.centerfoldsboston.com

Billing itself as "Boston's only gentleman's club," this upscale strip joint has the hottest dancers in Boston in a swanky setting that's clean and comfortable. When his wife asks where he's been, one acquaintance euphemistically refers to it as the Theater District Center for the Performing Arts, but truth be told, most of the girls actually can dance, and all of them are drool-worthy. If looking at naked women while eating is your thing, there's a complimentary buffet lunch from 12-2 pm, and Tuesday is amateur night, when patrons help choose the hottie who walks away with $700. Don't forget to bring a wad of ones and a credit card for lap dances, and remember: What happens at Centerfolds stays at Centerfolds.

BACHELORETTE PARTY

Embassy, 36 Lansdowne St., Boston, 866-400-MALE

www.maleencountershow.com

The Palace nightclub's closing in Saugus had female fans wondering what would happen to its legendary all-male beefcake revue. Well, the show's found a new home in a more convenient location. Every Saturday night on Lansdowne Street, from 8-11 pm, gyrating hard-bodied Adonises act out the patrons' erotic fantasies (naval officer, fireman, office dork with a rockin' bod) to high-energy music while squealing women tuck money into their thongs and get legless on sweet cocktails. It's a scene straight out of Sex and the City, and if there's one thing we learned from Samantha & Co., it's that women can be just as lecherous as men. bachelorette party should be a little wild, and t the place to indulge your inner sinner.

BEER BAR

Sunset Grill & Tap

130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331

www.allstonsfinest.com

Since the days of our Colonial forebears, beer Beantown have gone hand in hand. During American Revolution, there were 16 breweri Boston; supposedly, John Hancock himself us put kegs on the Boston Common and invite townspeople to his house for late-night pa while Paul Revere stopped at two pubs durin legendary midnight ride. The Sunset Grill & continues the city's long beer-loving tradition, nearly 400 bottled and canned brews and 112 on tap. The barroom features a menu of vintage cask ales, meads, lagers and lambics that no bar comes close to equaling. A haven for beer s and Homer Simpson–types alike, the Sunset is rare bar where you can sample an obscure micro or chug a Bud longneck, and its affordable, su ingly wholesome bar snacks rival those of the upscale night spots.

CHEAP BEER BAR

The Pour House

www.pourhouseboston.com

How cheap? Wicked cheap. Generations of co students have expanded their beer bellies wi busting their budgets at this studiously seedy, lege dive in the Back Bay. The food is tasty and reaso priced, with specials like a gargantuan nachos half-priced burgers on Saturdays, half-priced ch sandwiches on Wednesdays and weekend brun that ease the hangover—even while you're tyin on again (which also qualifies the Pour House fo Hair of the Dog That Bit You). The selection of is staggering, and the specialties de la maison in the BeerTini: your choice of Sam, Bass, Guinness Moon, PBR, Magic Hat, Bud Light, UFO or IPA 10-ounce martini glass for $3. Tuesdays during Re season, pitchers of Sam Adams go for $15, an video games and neon beer signs add the approp frat house ambience.

BEST-KEPT SECRET

The Wine Room at Sonsie

327 Newbury St., Boston, 617-351-2500, www.sonsieboston.com

Upstairs at Sonsie, a young and trendy crowd schmoozes and sups on chef Bill Poirier's eclectic menu. Everyone knows this Newbury Street spot for its outstanding food served in a casual, upbeat environment; fewer are aware that if they venture downstairs, a whole new intoxicating space exists. The downstairs wine room—which opened in July of 2005—boasts more than 200 offerings stored in a climate-controlled glass cellar, and best of all, they're willing to serve any and all of their selections by the glass. Dimly lit, it's cozy and seductive, with blood-red chair coverings and flickering white candles adding a jewel-like glow to glasses of wine. A great spot for a romantic tryst or a soulful chat at the bar with a close friend, it's an oasis on one of Boston's busiest streets.

sk 'n Flagon

Brookline Ave., Boston, 617-536-4840, www.casknflagon.com

r favorite part of its multimillion-dollar renovation is the nine-foot-high corner-to-corner windows allowing to bask in your proximity to the hallowed ground of Fenway, while nursing a few brewskis before the ne or watching it from the comfort of a newly installed, 100-foot-long bar. The regulars are great to chat h and seem to have more stats at their disposal than any of the anchors on SportsCenter, which incidentally be seen on many of the 60 plasma TVs surrounding the bar. On the patio, you can relax in the shade of the een Monster, and the superior (and reasonably priced) bar food beats the hell outta those concession extor- nists inside the park. The staff is friendly and fast and will get you out in time to see the first pitch, or you can p by after the game to celebrate in the new full-service nightclub with dancing, music and DJs, which is one ication that the owners anticipate having lots to celebrate this year. Can you say, "World Series"?

flanking the dance floor or mingle with the gorgeous and stylish crowd of fun-loving, pansexual party people. The club's constantly changing format includes Saturday night beats from white-hot DJ Adilson and Fling Thursdays (use your imagination). When you need a cool escape from the packed dance floor, retreat to the loungy Nu Room; or if you somehow can't find anyone you like among the huge crowds, you can always wander into Axis, Embassy, I/D or the Modern, all sister clubs in the Lyons Group family.

DANCING FOR THE NON-CLUBBER

Felt

www.feltclubboston.com

If a pro athlete's house from Cribs were converted into a nightclub, this would be it. The first floor houses a retro-futuristic bar reminiscent of the Playboy Mansion, but the DJs rival those at the best clubs in New York and Miami. Up a sweeping staircase is another lounge and bar scene, punctuated by blue pool tables and flat-screen TVs. The third floor features a private area with another bar and more pool tables, where partyers look down from on high to the floor below, while the fourth (and super-VIP) level has a long bar and hip décor where you and your entourage can really get funky. The music throughout is danceable, even for the rhythmically challenged, but if dancing isn't your thing, just hold onto your mojito and enjoy the scenery: Even the wallflowers here are attractive.

DIVE BAR

Hogan's Run

8 Lincoln St., Brighton, 617-783-8463

In the 19th century, bars were located below street level and patrons would "dive in" for a quick snort. Today's dives may be located aboveground, but modern patrons go to them looking for the same old things: cheap booze and a comfortable sketchiness. Hogan's Run has all that plus a jukebox, a courtyard outside where sauced-up smokers can get their fix and a selection of bar games like darts, pool and Big Buck Hunter. It's also a great place to hide from the swarms of pretentious nightcrawlers who infest other Boston bars, as well as an appropriately seedy place to do some daytime drinkin'. Bud drafts are $1, and the gin and tonics are lethal. The older regulars are a friendly and entertaining cast of characters, and bartender Jimmy Nation, who was named in these pages as one of Boston's Beloved Bartenders, has been known to instigate such piss-poor forms of behavior as dancing on the tables and building human pyramids.

40-SOMETHINGS' BAR

Abe & Louie's

www.abeandlouies.com

The premier hangout for the more mature and discerning Boston lounge lizard, this classic steakhouse is always packed. Despite its often hectic, compact lounge, Abe & Louie's attentive bartenders are quick with their shakers, and the crowd is so high-powered you won't mind rubbing elbows with them. You can sink into a Hollywood-style booth or sip your cocktail comfortably in an oversized courtroom chair. The atmosphere is elegant yet inviting, with chandeliers, massive torchieres, mahogany detailing and a barrel-vaulted ceiling. This year the proprietors converted a private room into a regular dining area that now fits 80 more people and features a full bar. If Boston's bar scene seems too puppyish to you, Abe & Louie's is your dose of sophistication.

WATERING HOLE FOR THE WELL-HEELED

Clio

370A Comm. Ave., Boston, 617-536-7200, www.cliorestaurant.com

At Clio, chef-owner Ken Oringer's rarefied menu offers ambrosial French-American fare with a bit of an Asian twist. It's the ultimate experience in pampered dining—with prices to match. As for the bar scene, it's swanky and subdued, well-suited to socialites and sophisticated barflies. Unlike the bars at comparable restaurants (not that there are a lot of them), the bar area at Clio is more than simply a holding pen for people waiting to be seated at a table. Instead, it's an experience unto itself, where you can enjoy an intimate cocktail (the craveworthy Enter the Dragon martini, topped with a sprinkling of cayenne, is reason enough to come here) or an elaborate meal while being waited on by some of the most attentive and talented bartenders in Boston. Ideal for a first date or a catch-up night with an old friend, it's expensive, yes, but worth every penny.

GAY MEN'S NIGHT OUT

Avalon Sundays

15 Lansdowne St., Boston, 617-262-2424

www.avalonboston.com

Superlatively beautiful (or at least striking) gay men, many of them shirtless, writhing to the latest dance beats. If that sounds appetizing, Boston's longest-running boys-only night is the place to wrap up the weekend, with famous circuit DJs like Tracey Young, Julian Marsh, Susan Morabito and Manny Lehman making sure that man with the four-way hips won't leave the dance floor before you can get his number. The atmosphere is heavy on sweat, cologne and male pheromones, although there's no paucity of estrogen (or estrogen impersonation) in the form of drag divas like Lady Bunny. And it gets bonus points for having lots of hidden nooks and crannies where you can escape the thumping music and make a little music with the hottie you met dancing on a pedestal.

GIRLS' NIGHT OUT

Wednesday Nights at News

www.newsboston.com

Maybe there's no such thing as a free lunch, but dinner's a different story. Women who show up for Wednesday nights at News know that they can get a free three-course meal from 5-11 pm. The extensive martini menu has a slew of cocktails for even the girliest drinker. Fresh and bright salads and sushi accompany the usual menu staples, and the chocolate cake is worth breaking your diet for. If the crowd of suits from the Financial District doesn't tickle your fancy, you can always look to score a phone number off one of the waiters. The bar makes the back room narrow, ensuring just the right amount of flirtatious body contact on this busy night.

HOT SPOT

Middlesex Lounge

315 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-868-6739

www.middlesexlounge.com

The array of music here might be the most eclectic in town, from French pop, Latin and Afrobeat to electric indie, hip-hop and rhythmic soul. You can join the dancing crowd or watch the scene: DJs spinning seven nights a week, partygoers dancing when the spirit moves them, and local breakdancers stopping in to take over a corner and show off their moves. Middlesex is a great spot to grab a meal before a show at one of the neighboring rock venues, and an even better place to return to after the show, when the tables and chairs are rolled to the side, making room for you to get down. Aesthetically pleasing bartenders—both the buff and the waifish kind—are the cherry on top.

Tavern on the Water

1 Pier 6 on 8th St. (Charlestown Navy Yard), Charlestow

617-242-8040, www.tavernonthewater.com

It's always had a killer view of the city skyline across the Harbor, but since owners Brad Dalbeck and Chris Damian took over in 2005, they've transformed the tavern from a casual bar catering to the boating crowd into a smart marina restaurant. The complete turnaround i cludes a constantly changing menu, a new and more sophisticated wine list, new furniture an hardwood floors, and a refurbished outdoor b and kitchen. The only thing that hasn't change the dynamite panorama you can see from ever table, making this a great place to take a date entertain out-of-town guests. The outdoor pa has a 200-person capacity, and tables there ar (not surprisingly) popular for warm weather d ing, and worth waiting for. The well-prepared comfort food includes highly imaginative, seasonal specials, and for brunchers, there's even make-your-own Bloody Mary bar on Sundays from 11:30 am–4 pm.

PRE-FENWAY

The Baseball Tavern

To an outsider, the rituals of a Red Sox fan might seem limited to chanting "Yankees Suck," but for true die-hards, deciding where to have a pre-game pop is more important than restating the obvious. For many of them, a trip to Fenway begins with a frosty one at the Baseball Tavern. Until the past off-season, not much had changed in this hideout, including bartender Freddy, whose career began around the time of Jim Rice's, and who despite some recent medical problems is still a part of the Tavern family. However, some change is good, and the Tavern's recent move (after 37 years in a small, one-story location) to the space that was known as Sophia's was a smart one. The former Latin paradise now has the vibe of a spacious, members-only clubhouse for fans, with four floors—including a roof deck—pool tables and numerous TVs. You might not ever make it to your seats.

ing and coal fireplace give Hennessy's the authentic feel of a Dublin pub, and the lilting brogues of many servers add to the welcoming vibe. Hearty dishes like shepherd's pie go nicely with that pint of Guinness, as does the live nightly entertainment, which received a boost this year when the bar expanded into a second floor (nicknamed the Hooley House) that hosts live music on Friday and Saturday night. The fact that the Irish whiskey selection goes beyond the usual two ("Protestant" Bushmills and "Catholic" Jamesons) is another good reason to polish one of the bar stools with your ass, but the best of all is that authentic Emerald Isle atmosphere.

LESBIAN NIGHT

Dyke Night Goes Retro at Toast Lounge

70 Union Square, Somerville, www.dykenight.com

Dyke Night Goes Retro was created to cater to a close-knit, activist community of sisters of Sappho who enjoy an ultrarelaxed atmosphere. Previously held at J.P.'s Midway Café, the evening now takes place at Toast Lounge, where there's a slightly retro feel as DJ Susan Esthera spins '70s, '80s and '90s dance hits. Social events like the Gay Film Festival's after-party, speed-dating nights and stand-up comedy by the pants-wettingly funny Sandra Valls help to support a network of lesbian activist groups and causes. It should come as no surprise that Dyke Night founder Kristen Porter feels strongly about linking entertainment with philanthropy; as the executive director of Pathways to Wellness, a nonprofit holistic wellness center in the Back Bay, she donates more than 25 percent of profits from events. In other words, there's more to Dyke Night than girl meets girl.

MOST ROMANTIC

Top of the Hub

800 Boylston St., Boston, 617-536-1775, www.topofthehub.net

Perched atop the Prudential Center like an eagle's nest, this lush and romantic spot for drinks offers unparalleled views of the city from its second-tallest building. An ear-popping elevator ride leads to the 52nd-floor bar and restaurant, where you can enjoy drinks in the lounge or a meal in the crisp dining room while taking in the city's skyline. The attentive wait staff and superior cuisine, from tuna tempura to grilled beef tenderloin, make it a great choice for a first date, 10th anniversary, or even a proposal. Live jazz enhances the lounge-like atmosphere, and guests are welcome to dance cheek to cheek with that special someone on the postage stamp–sized dance floor.

PLACE TO FIND A RELATIONSHIP OF LIMITED DURATION

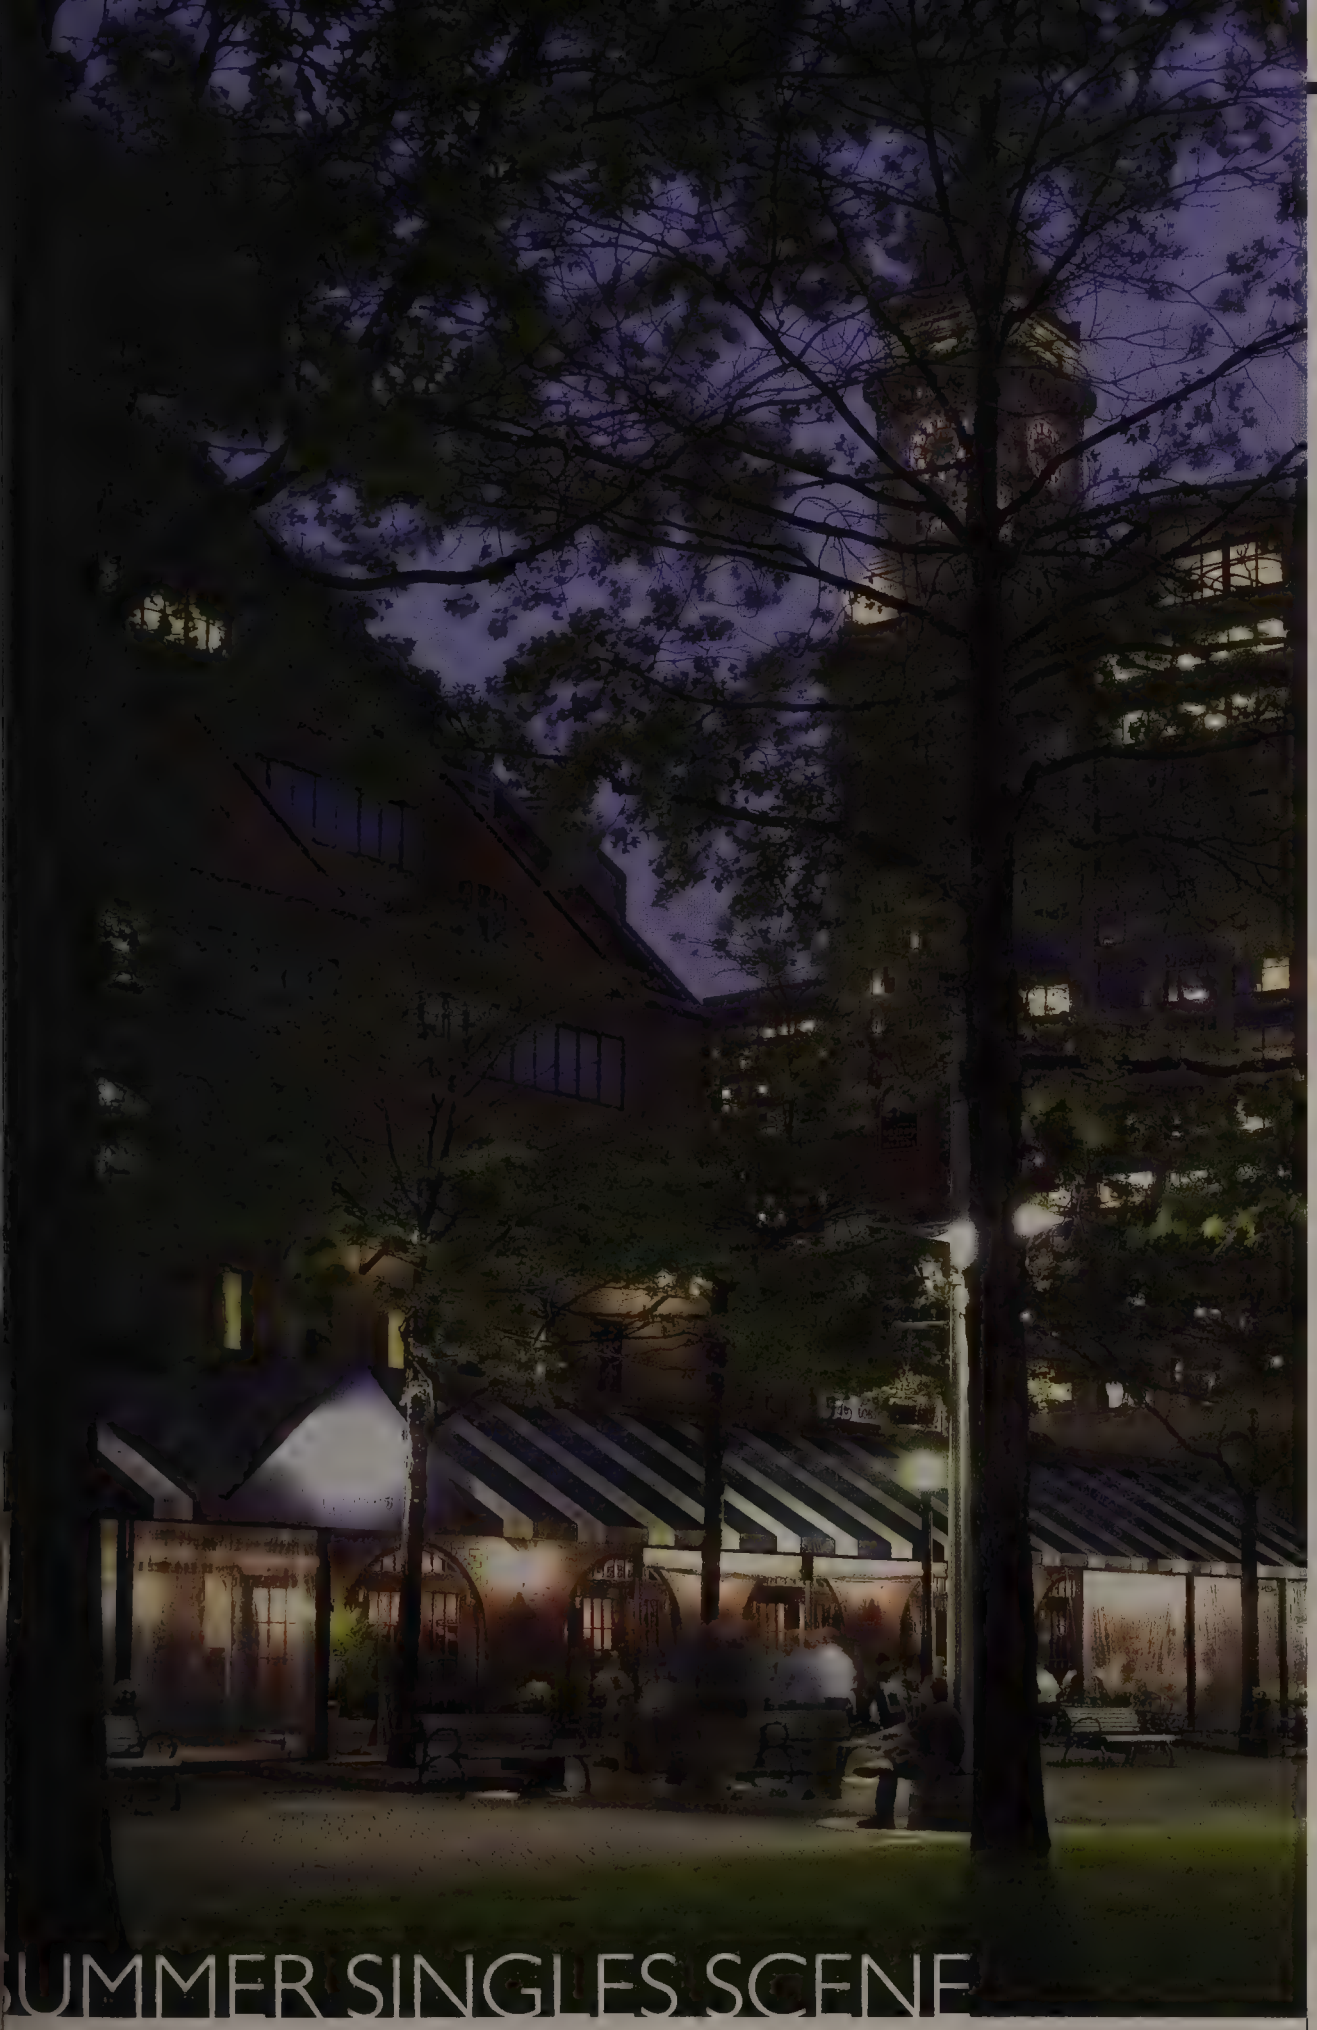
HOTEL BAR

Cuffs—An Irish Bar, at Jurys Hotel

350 Stuart St., Boston, 617-532-3828

Everyone calls it Jurys (for the hotel that houses it), but the bar's official name is Cuffs, a reference to the building's original tenant, the city's police headquarters. Whatever you call it, this low-ceilinged bar is clearly doing something right, drawing crowds pretty much every night of the week, with a line forming outside on Fridays and Saturdays. A popular spot for afterwork drinks during the week, it draws the single-and-searching crowd on weekends, with a rotating supply of hotel guests keeping things interesting. In cool weather, two fireplaces make the place cozy, while the roomy patio fills quickly when the weather's warm. The bar fare is traditional but delicious, complementing luscious cocktails like a key lime martini kept icy in its own shaker. Even those arriving late can enjoy the full menu until midnight, and until 1 am on Fridays and Saturdays.



SUMMER SINGLES SCENE

little slice of Margaritaville on Boston's waterfront, this popular summer spot for young professionals is miniscent of a rum-chugging, beer-slinging joint in the Caribbean. The dark wood interior, island paradise ecor, bountiful patio seating and prime view of the water give it the feel of a boat about to dock. Like a ol breeze over a calm ocean, a night at Tia's is laid-back and relaxing. The afterwork crowd soaks in the ew while enjoying libations like the Peach Cosmo. Singles on the hunt mix and mingle among the clus- red tables and flirt shamelessly while observant cocktail waitresses make sure glasses are always full. od-wise, there's the famed $18.95 lobster special, and on the patio, you can shift into full summer mode sitting under the heated awnings and enjoying dining al fresco. And it's a helluva lot easier to get to than e Cape and Islands.

First, there's the Alley Cat, a full-time karaoke bar (co-owned by Paul Pierce, no less) that also features stand-up comedy, live music and complimentary pizza for the afterwork crowd on Thursdays. Then there's the Big Easy, which (as the name implies) offers good times worthy of Mardi Gras. The Liquor Store is the chameleon of the group—a place where gals can call ahead and organize a girls' night out or bachelorette party for the bride-to-be, and the fellas can take a ride on Boston's only mechanical bull, after a couple of swigs from a beer bottle served in a brown paper bag. The Sweetwater Café rounds out the roster, but wherever you go, there's enough eye candy to keep the most roving Casanova busy. Just don't try the old New Orleans trick of shouting, "Show us your tits!" This town was founded by Puritans, after all.

POST-BANKNORTH
The Greatest Bar

262 Friend St., Boston, 617-367-0544, www.thegreatestbar.com

Back when the Garden was really the Garden, when the Celtics weren't inept and the Bruins weren't irrelevant, every bar around North Station had the good karma of this post-game meeting (and drinking) spot. A big screen shows video of the glory days of Larry Bird, Bill Russell, John Havlicek and Cam Neely, while photos, memorabilia and huge murals paying homage to the local teams provide an appropriate rah-rah background. With five floors to handle the post-game rush and the occasional dose of live music, you can celebrate a win here or forget about your sorrows, and the location in the shadow of the Garden is much appreciated during the inclement weather that accompanies the winters of our discontent.

POST-FENWAY Game On!

www.gameonboston.com

For those who want to spend as much time at Fenway as possible (or those who want to get their $40 worth from the parking lot), Game On! is as close as you'll get to the locker room after the game. Built into Fenway itself, the former bowling alley has an appropriate color scheme of fire engine red and royal blue, accented by 70 colossal plasma screens. Downstairs, gamers can head over to one of the private skybox suites, which boast TVs equipped with multiplayer Xbox, GameCube and Playstation2 consoles. Wednesday is trivia night when the Sox aren't in season, but all year round you can enjoy upscale pub grub like wood-fired pizza, seafood, buffalo wings and chops. You can eat either in the comfort of AC or on an outdoor patio where you can soak in the gratifying roar of elated fans heading home. Why get jostled by a pack of amped-up sports nuts when you can chill here until the sidewalks are clear?

PRE-BANKNORTH
The Harp

85 Causeway St., Boston, 617-742-1010

www.harpboston.com

Let's face it: The single most important factor in a pre-game drinking spot is the ease with which you can get a drink. The open floor plan and huge first-floor bar area at this North Station Irish pub get the job done quickly and efficiently. Multiple TVs make it easy to check out SportsCenter or the pre-game show, and the windows up front are open in good weather, making it the ideal place to watch the parade of fans filing past. A solid variety of beer, a cover band upstairs and a DJ in the basement make it a decent place to pave the way for a raucous evening or to have a quick nip with your pals. A world-class hangout for world-class sports fans.

GUYS' NIGHT OUT

Kings

10 Scotia St., Boston, 617-266-2695, www.backbaykings.com

Being a regular at a neighborhood haunt has its charms, but once in a while you and the boys need to broaden your horizons. Far from the usual pool and darts, Kings is an adult amusement park with a '60s Vegas vibe. The entertainment is offbeat—16 lanes of bowling and eight Gold Crown billiard tables with their own bar and lounge—and the food is hearty and manly: pork chops and steak tips, for example, with a late-night menu served until 1:45 am. Sunday's a great night to stop by, since the Sox game is accompanied by 25-cent wings and $1 cheese pizzas, as well as the always price-friendly $3 drafts. It's so much fun, you might even come back with your girlfriend.

PRO-ATHLETE PLAYGROUND

Daisy Buchanan's

240 Newbury St., Suite A, Boston, 617-247-8516

Now here's the quintessential Sox-spotting bar. Bronson Arroyo pretty much lived here when he was in Boston, and plenty of his former teammates still frequent this Newbury Street landmark. The crowd is varied, and it's a great spot for mingling among diverse groups, from young professionals to the international, ultraposh crowd that usually complains about how early everything in Boston closes. While brushing elbows with the pros, you can enjoy the hearty pub grub (lobster specials, salmon clubs, swordfish kabobs) until 9 pm Monday through Thursday, and until 9:30 pm on weekends. Autograph hounds, beware: The atmosphere is laid-back, which is why athletes like to hang here, and pointing, fawning or otherwise acting overly excited is highly uncool. Get there early, as the place is consistently packed, but on the plus side, it might be your favorite athlete you end up sharing that cozy corner with.

RAINY/SNOWY/FREEZING DAY DRINKING

Vinalia

101 Arch St., Boston, 617-737-1777, www.vinaliaboston.com

Location, location, location: It can make or break a nightspot. Located in the building of the Downtown Crossing T stop, Vinalia features creative American cuisine and an extensive wine program, including more than 40 wines by the glass and weekly/monthly wine events. The drink selection alone should be enough to get you in there, with a list that features more than 2,500 different bottles and more than 150 varieties. The food is also cozy: wood-grilled pizzas and burgers and steak tartare. Why head out in foul weather when you can park your fanny here and be treated like a king?

REJUVENATION

Saint

90 Exeter St., Boston, 617-236-1134, www.saintnitery.com

When this self-described "nitery" opened in 2002, you'd have been hard-pressed to find a slow night over on Exeter. But in 2006, with the "new hot spot" novelty long having worn off and new lounges popping up in droves, Saint needed a little boost. So this spring management began working with promoters and, as a result, have rejuvenated their longtime Sunday and Monday night staples, while also creating a new hip-hop night on Fridays. Word on the street is that many of the well-heeled, Back Bay sophisticates from the club's early days have once again been spotted sprawling on one of the velvet banquettes in the red bordello room or hangin' in the sleek lounge.

SPORTS BAR

The Four's

166 Canal St., Boston, 617-720-4455, www.thefours.com

There are few hangouts in Boston that could possibly do justice to our city's vastly rich (and somewhat obsessive) sports culture, but the Four's gets the job done. It's got the most extensive collection of sports memorabilia in the city, and a menu that's equally impressive. Start with a Super Bowl of clam chowder, fill your lineup card with the Green Monster jalapeño poppers or hand-cut steak tips and go into extra innings with an all-star roster of desserts. And of course, check out the tons of satellite TVs that make it easy to watch D Flutie's old team play while you're eating the Doug F tie chicken sandwich.

30-SOMETHINGS' BAR

Excelsior

www.excelsiorrestaurant.com

A moneyed and fashionably dressed clientele flock this soignée lounge, with its view of the Public Gar and impressive 40-page wine list. (Bottles are stylis showcased in a climate-controlled, three-story glass w tower.) As for cocktails, an extensive drink menu cludes a variety of creative variations on the mar theme and slightly tweaked classics like a basil moj Snacks are appropriately upscale, with options l smoked duck quesadillas, chicken tempura, homem sausages and, of course, the signature lobster pizza, dish that's launched 1,000 diets. The brown-with-oran piping décor is retro-glam in the extreme, and after-h the bar transforms into a hip hangout, with DJs perfo ing on Sunday nights.

20-SOMETHINGS' BAR

The Kells

161 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-782-9082, www.thekells.c

If you've ever stopped by the Kells on a Monday ni you know that Animal House wasn't much exaggerat college life. Every night of the week, this bar cater students making merry. Serving up Asian cuisine, place is lined with big booths that accommodate la raucous parties. The huge bar areas (there are four b in all), along with a large dance floor in back an smaller one downstairs, make it easy to party like 1999. Thursday nights especially have become a m for the BC and BU crowd, when the "Fun House" tures such carnival games as dunk tanks, moonwa sumo wrestling, interactive surfing contests and co Jello fights. The local dean of student life would doubtedly frown on such extracurricular activities, she's a sourpuss, anyway. It's nice to know the frat h mentality is alive and well and living at the Kells.

Ace, Frankie and Sal, the masterminds behind 6one7 Productions, cater to an eclectic crowd with their ever-evolving, let-loose Tuesday night extravaganza. Not the place to be if you're a wallflower, this is a get-your-groove-on type of party, where you'll be too busy dancing to work up a Wednesday-morning hangover. Featuring rotating DJs and weekly themes, Rumor is the sexiest ultralounge in town, and on Tuesdays, it's filled with some of the most beautiful people in the city, a smattering of celebrities, pro athletes and other members of the elite. The mix of hip-hop, R&B, disco and funk, with random tracks from the '70s, '80s and '90s sprinkled in, will please every musical palate. Anyone not on the dance floor should either be on crutches or wear a sign saying, "Rhythmically Impaired."

WEDNESDAY

Foundation Lounge

500 Comm. Ave., Boston, 617-859-9900

www.foundationlounge.com

Hump day at this funky, Euro-Asian hangout is groovin' with a weekly rotation of DJs spinning anything from Top 40 and '80s to R&B and hip-hop. Kenmore's glowing Citgo sign filters some Boston charm through the windows as an upscale crowd sips sake or indulges in a little bubbly. An assortment of beer and wine pairs deliciously with Japanese-inspired Zensai appetizers, like steamed shrimp dumplings and salmon bruschetta. And cocktails like the Wild Mango Martini and Coconut Coffee Martini hold their own as first, second and third courses. Make sure to call 24 hours ahead to enjoy the mid-week festivities—Wednesday nights are RSVP only.

THURSDAY

Reunion Thursdays at Redline

59 JFK St., Cambridge, 617-491-9851

www.redlinecambridge.com

Those who assume that Cambridge has little to offer in the way of nightlife haven't been to Redline. With subdued lighting, décor that consists of black leather booths, dark wood tables, a stone and glass bar and a back room for larger groups, it's a bit of Soho in Harvard Square. Soon-to-be-grads from Harvard, MIT and Tufts are drawn to the spacious dance floor that appears at night once the tables used for business lunches and casual dinners are pushed out of the way. The patio is open late, and the kitchen is open until 10 pm. Black-clad waiters scurry about the handsomely decorated dining room, and if the sophisticated college crowd doesn't do it for you, try the tables out front that offer an entertaining view of busy JFK Street. Music by the likes of NGP Allstars—Mas, Cnyce & Elyte—mashup, hip-hop, reggae and classics set a cool mood for late-night dancing. Who'd have guessed the geeks knew how to party?

Beat Research at the Enormous Room

567 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-491-5550, www.enormous.tv

Jake Trussell and Antony Flackett first met in grad school at Massachusetts College of Art nearly 10 years ago. Although one of them is now a college professor himself, they maintain the student attitude under the monikers DJ Flack and C every Monday at the Enormous Room, where they've been curing cases of the Mondays since 2004. The evening draws big-name DJs and artists from all over the map, as well as a wide range of weeknight beatheads from all over the Hub. It's hard to describe exactly which genre Flack and C fall into, as they escape any potential pigeonholing by fusing a mix of beats from the worlds of hip-hop, reggae and dubcore, just to name a few. Their blanket tag line is "experimental party music." We don't care what they call it. We just like dancing to it.

FRIDAY

Ned Devine's

250 Quincy Market Building, Boston, 617-248-8800

www.neddevinesboston.com

When the workweek ends, where can you let loose that's not a hassle getting into or hanging out at? The answer is Ned Devine's. For as long as we can remember, this hot spot has been packed every Friday with a non-attitudinal, crowd—a no-frills establishment wh workaholics can loosen their ties. T chemical relaxation comes courtesy four large bar areas, while the enterta ment includes numerous TVs to che out whatever game happens to be on charming, homey feel produces an en ronment reminiscent of Cheers, wh warm lighting, hand-painted murals a stone piles that evoke Celtic folkta compose the décor. Around 6 pm, af all the office drones have had a f drinks, many head to the adjoining P ris Lounge, where an array of popu cover bands play, often rock outfits fr New York and Philly. Since the cove usually only $5 before 9 pm and $ after, it's a great way to wash awa week's worth of stress without piss away your paycheck.

SATURDAY

Seductive Saturdays at Axis

www.bostonaxis.com

Saturday is amateur night at most b and clubs, and one of the few truly c scenes we've found is this Lansdow Street landmark. The single-digit co charge is wallet-friendly, and even biggest klutz will feel the booming bea the best trance, techno and house mu pumps up the crowd. Axis comprises stories: The first contains a large da floor with a full DJ booth on one s while the second contains a mediu sized dance floor surrounded by tables hanging out. Your entertainment for night—not counting the packs of bea ful people—is courtesy of DJ Big, w keeps the party going every week with mix of hip-hop, reggae and R&B h Imagine a painfully cool downto Manhattan club where everyone's bl about everything but the music, a you'll begin to get the idea.

SUNDAY

Dub Station at Bill's Bar

www.billsbar.com

While you sip on a piña colada and d away to the mellow island beats of D Station, the weather outside is a n factor. The different reggae bands ev week create the most unique and c sistently entertaining Sunday in to The club's big sound and small st make for an intense and intimate ex rience that's appreciated by the re lars—a crowd of exuberant students young professionals. Dub Station p sents a unique lineup of rhythm-r DJs who focus on bass, drums and keyboard, th melodies spanning from infectious roots rock to da hall. They've appeared on stages across the cou with acts like Toots and the Maytals and Buju Bant but the band always returns to its regular hometo gig, much to the delight of loyal fans. A Sunday sp here is like a quick jaunt to Jamaica before the realit the workweek sets in.

BACK BAY

The Rattlesnake Bar and Grill

www.rattlesnakebar.com

Back Bayers breathed a gigantic sigh of relief a year ago, when this local favorite returned to Boylston Street after a brief stint as a bar named George. And they wasted no time inviting the Rattlesnake back into their hearts. Shots of Patrón and rounds of margaritas and Dos Equis are always flying at this Southwestern-themed spot with a diverse pan-Latino menu that provides the necessary kick for hungry partyers. The walls have colorful murals of sun-streaked vistas reminiscent of a Cormac McCarthy novel and huge plasma screens—perfect for catching a little béisbol. The outdoor roof deck offers a full bar and food, while the second floor boasts a purple pool table and more TVs. In the Back Bay, getting bitten by the Rattlesnake is never a cause for worry.

BEACON HILL

150 Bowdoin St., Boston, 617-227-7100, www.21stboston.com

Atop Beacon Hill in the shadow of the Statehouse, the 21st Amendment is the neighborhood's de facto clubhouse. For those of you who flunked history, it's named after the constitutional amendment that repealed Prohibition, and it attracts an eclectic crowd that ranges from blue-collar to blueblood. The two low-ceilinged rooms with dark wood, brick walls and a large fireplace give it the feel of a Colonial tavern, where you're guaranteed to run into one of the town criers at the bar. The prices are reasonable and the food surprisingly good: We suggest the "original" baked potato soup. The building was originally designed in 1899 as Boston's most luxurious hotel, complete with electricity, running water, a roof garden and the city's first "passenger lift." These days, it's less fancy but much more charming.

BRIGHTON

SoHo

386 Market St., Brighton, 617-562-6000, www.sohoboston.com

ESPN SportsZone meets a swanky New York hot spot at this hidden gem in Brighton. By day, huge windows and skylights shine plenty of light over the leather seats and tables, surrounded by walls bearing both photographs of the city skyline and modern art. With two 42-inch plasma screens, 10 32-inch flat screens and two projection screens, you can't miss a play of the game even if you have to pee. (Yes, there are even TVs in the bathrooms.) At night, the downstairs level is cleared out for dancing, the bar pumps out potent potables, and the kitchen serves up munchies like quesadillas and five-spice calamari. It's also a good place to recover on a Sunday morning, when the jazz brunch includes limitless visits to the carving station, egg post, cold table and dessert station. Wash it all down with a few Bloody Marys, and you won't care that tomorrow's Monday.

BROOKLINE

Washington Square Tavern

714 Washington St., Brookline, 617-232-8989

A home away from home for a lot of Brookliners, it's a tavern in the old-fashioned sense—the meeting place for locals who need to decompress. The cocktails are perfectly made, but it's really more of a beer place, with 10 imports and microbrews on tap. The only entertainment is the friendly, witty banter between the cracker-jack staff and the regulars, which, given the clientele, is better than anything on TV, and the food is affordable comfort fare. An Irish-pub vibe comes from the dim lighting and dark interior, not to mention owner Gerald Finnegan, as charming a rogue as ever owned a bar. The hearty brunch in the fall and winter, accompanied by an "eye-opener" like the Bloody Maria or Greyhound, is just what the doctor ordered. In fact, he's there most Sundays.

CAMBRIDGE: HARVARD SQUARE

Shay's

58 JFK St., Cambridge, 617-864-9161

If your heart's desire is to spend a summer afternoon sipping a cold pint and watching the sure-to-be-interesting mix of Cambridge pedestrians ramble by, there's no outdoor patio more comfortable (or sought-after) than Shay's. Locals (both of the student and professional variety) generally snatch up the limited seating at this laid-back, English-style pub, which offers 16 different wines by the glass. Succumb to their pub-fare nachos and sandwiches or branch out with a hummus plate and baked brie, and make all those passers-by jealous. Hey, maybe a cute one will join you for a drink!

CAMBRIDGE: INMAN SQUARE

Bukowski Tavern

1281 Cambridge St., Cambridge
617-497-7077

To folks walking past it, the fire-engine red, Winnebago-sized Bukowski Tavern gets attention for its appearance, but inside it's the endless selection of brew that's the draw. The inventory covers everything from a PBR on draft for $2.99 to a 750-ml bottle of Thiriez French Farmhouse Ale for $21. Other choices? Lambic, cask, single and double I.P.A., wheat, ale, porter, stout, lager, smoked beer and a sake hybrid and fruit beer, to name just a few. The 15 varieties on tap are just as colorful, and the humor of the bright exterior is matched by the munchies that slide across the narrow bar, such as "white trash cheese dip." If the hard-drinking namesake poet were still alive, he'd doubtless approve.

www.bsidelounge.com

You don't need saddle shoes and a poodle skirt to enjoy the retro-'50s vibe of this energetic comfort-food haven, as bartenders and wait staff are more likely to sport cool tattoos than letterman jackets while serving up grilled chicken BLTs and martinis. A diverse, loyal crowd flocks to this funky diner-themed bar for its expansive cocktail list, friendly staff, melted gouda, late-night hours and free hard-boiled eggs served at the bar in lieu of peanuts. Are you one of those people who aspired to be a mad scientist, time-machine inventor or space ranger, but stayed up all night partying and failed your chem final? No worries—you can always pretend you're a physics whiz at Miracle of Science, the MIT-student favorite that offers great burgers and no problem sets. Pull a chair up to a slate-grey lab table and order a shrimp skewer or blue cheese burger off of the periodic table of tastiness posted on the wall (all while a picture of Einstein watches you from above the bar). You'll have a much more entertaining lab group than you remember from high school, as you pick from a vast selection of beers, liquors and wines served in test tube–esque glasses. This laid-back lunch locale transforms into a buzzing local hangout by night, so show up early to get a seat at the front of the class.

CHARLESTOWN
The Warren Tavern
2 Pleasant St., Boston, 617-241-8142
www.warrentavern.com

When your past regulars include the likes of Paul Revere and George Washington, you must've done something right. This Colonial-era watering hole is undoubtedly one of the most authentic places in America in which to down a cold Sam Adams. The low, timbered ceiling is the real McCoy, as is the attitude-free staff. Live music on Wednesday and Thursday nights attracts a younger mix of townies and people who know how to have a good time, and the off-the-beaten-path location means a blessed minimum of tourists—which is ironic, since while they're marveling at Old Ironsides or the Bunker Hill monument, they could be sitting inside a place just as historic, having a drink.

DORCHESTER
C.F. Donovan's
112 Savin Hill Ave., Dorchester, 617-436-2226

The friendly service at this longtime staple on the Dorchester bar scene draws a humble crowd looking to catch the game, and the extensive beer selection includes Harp and Smithwick's. Somewhat of a hidden gem for Dot and Southie residents, chances are you've passed it a million times while driving under the Savin Hill Bridge but never noticed it. Next time, stop in and have a pop and tell 'em we sent you.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING
Beantown Pub
100 Tremont St., Boston, 617-426-0111
www.beantownpub.com

Pay no attention to the touristy name. Despite a few sightseers sporting Harvard sweatshirts and asking directions to Cheers, the Beantown Pub is a genuinely wicked pissah bah. The crowd is a boisterous mix of boozers attracted by the convenient location, 14 TVs, eight pool tables and reasonably priced food and booze. The kitchen is open until 1 am, and all of the beers on tap cost under $5. Try finding that in Faneuil Hall.

FANEUIL HALL
Houston's
60 State St., Boston, 617-573-9777, www.hillstone.com

The jury's out as to whether it's a restaurant or a European disco, but one thing we can say without ambivalence is that the atmosphere is comfortable whether you're huddled inside on a winter's night or lounging on the patio on a warm summer evening. It's a great place to observe the human rodeo that is Faneuil Hall (watch that State Street lawyer impatiently walk behind a pack of pant-suited retirees), and the large bar pumps out fantastic mixed drinks. Always packed after work, it miraculously avoids being a lure for tourists, perhaps because it's a national chain. Well, we don't care. All that matters is that it's a cool place in a not-so-cool part of town.

JAMAICA PLAIN
James's Gate
5–11 McBride St., Boston, 617-983-2000, www.jamessgate.com

At James's Gate, it's always appropriate to order a Guinness, given that the bar's name comes from the brewery Arthur Guinness founded in Dublin in 1759. All the hallmarks of a real Irish pub are evident, and the cozy bar boasts a fine selection of stouts and wines, as well. The Irish accents and the blarney they spew will keep you laughing, while the long wooden bar and smart interior give it a contemporary feel. Whether you want a single malt or a pint of lager, this is one spot where it's St. Paddy's Day every day of the year.

Model Café
7 N Beacon St., Allston, 617-254-9365

Sure it's not as delightfully divey as it used to be, but this hipster haven is still our favorite gritty Allston hangout. If you come to the Model, you come for the beer or to meet up with local rockers, since the name has nothing to do with the other kind of model (as in "human stick insects with pouty lips," to quote The Incredibles). Locals in search of a cheap drink, along with students, punk rockers and anyone on a tight budget looking for a relaxed hangout, will love this little decompression chamber. The walls are covered with work by local artists as well as dart boards, but heed this word of caution: We've seen some pie-eyed customers playing. J. Geils once kept rehearsal space downstairs, which isn't the only thing that gives it some musical cred. We defy you to think of a song that isn't on the jukebox.

Waterfront Café
450 Commercial St., Boston, 617-523-0613
www.waterfront-cafe.com

Don't come looking for bocce balls, because the names of the games at this North End haunt are baseball and football. Owner Rocco Zagarella prides himself on the numerous TVs airing Red Sox and Pats games, which fans can watch while enjoying giant portions of tasty Italian eats at great prices (and grumbling about those damn Yankees). You'll feel right at home ordering a Bud and loosening your tie (and maybe your belt, after you dive into the delicious food). Don't worry if your drink of choice isn't beer. In addition to flawlessly concocted martinis and cordials, there's an extensive wine l with selections from every region of Italy, Fran and the States. A great hang that attracts a f gang, it's the perfect place to spend an afterno an evening or both.

HIP-HOP ACT

The Foundation Movement

www.foundationhiphop.net

Like a lot of independent hip-hoppers, the Foundation's two MCs have solid voices and a slew of self-released tracks on the Internet and in stores. Unlike the rest of the pack, however, this group has something to say—and rock-solid beats to rock over. The trio of Eroc, Optimus and DJ El bring more than lyrical skills and hot beats to the game; they also bring a message. Their rhymes express unity, and an unapologetic rejection of the negativity that pervades so much of today's hip-hop. You won't find bling, hos or drug deals in these rhymes—but this isn't namby-pamby nice-guy rap, either. Speaking out about economic oppression and political injustice used to be one of hip-hop's cornerstone themes, and the Foundation is reviving that ailing element. Plus, they talk the talk and walk the walk. They've not only received critical praise for their music, but have also been civically honored for their activism and local volunteer efforts.

This longtime Boston guitar (and drum) slinger has done time in some of the area's most seminal bands (Codeine and Come, for example, both early Nirvana labelmates), as well as the Willard Grant Conspiracy and Evan Dando's touring band. His new album is an atmospheric, cinematic tour through some emotionally loaded terrain. Affecting without being affected—a rarity in the indie-rock/folk realm in which he's staked his claim—the tunes are simple at th roots, augmented whimsically yet deftly with strin synths and fuzzed-out guitar. Great Scott

www.greatscottboston.com

You can almost hear the sighs of the dispossessed frat boys and sports-bar regulars: "This used to be my playground." Tough luck, dudes—Great Scott's attitude readjustment has stuck. The DMB jukebox of yesteryear has given way to the hip new sounds of today's rock, dance and . . . well, yeah, some of that stuff's just noise. High-profile acts like soon-to-be-performing Diplo, and favorites like the Editors have fueled Great Scott's rep amongst the city's hipsterati, and with the continuing help of local wunderkind promoter Ben Sisto, the club's poised to become Boston's next legendary rock club. Imagine the Rat, with less squalor. And these kids aren't all bad; even though the music might drown out the play-by-play, you can still watch the Sox on the TV over the bar.

CURATOR TO WATCH

Ms. Rotzel has made quite a name for herself in her roles at MIT's Center for Advanced Visual Studies and Berwick Research Institute. Her choices of exciting artists, along with her daring yet accessible approach t presentation, have put her squarely in the pince-nez of Boston's art appreciation circles. Bringing the artist the viewer together is a priority for Rotzel; she organizes artist meet-and-greet events and discussions for most of her openings. Her opening with the BCA and Mills Gallery was a success not only for her, but also the Boston art scene. We were pretty excited about including this maverick curator/artist in this year's awards, but when we tried to contact her, she replied with an e-mail saying that she was somewhere in Turkey, moving back and forth between a cave and a tree house. Slim Jim & the Mad Cows

You know how you'll ask someone what kind of music they like, and they'll say, "Oh, I listen to pretty much everything"—and nine times out of 10, that's immediately followed by "except country and heavy metal"? Well, you won't find those snobs at a Slim Jim & the Mad Cows show, and hell, who needs 'em? Jim and the Cows' technique of taking metal anthems by the likes of Motorhead, Judas Priest and, yes, even the mighty Led Zeppelin, and turning them into rip-roaring country-style rockers, makes for some damn good live entertainment. They look the part, too, performing in overalls, straw hats and all the accoutrements associated with the genre. COMEDY ACT

The Walsh Brothers

After hacking away separately at the ruthless stand-up circuit, Chris and David Walsh decided to join forces a few years ago, and the combination's been a hit. Their approach to performance is decidedly low-key. Between (or sometimes instead of) sketches, they tell stories, talk about the news and have a few beers on stage. The Walshes also employ videos in their shows, which they initially edited back and forth between two VCRs. But this deceptively simple aesthetic is just a front, behind which these two brothers develop 40 minutes of hilarious material each week. The brothers were recently invited to perform at the prestigious HBO Aspen Comedy Festival, a stepping-stone to coveted gigs like appearances on Leno and Letterman. Unsurprisingly, the Walshes killed—so set your TiVO and get ready to die laughing.

Company's acclaimed resident playwright, Kirsten Greenidge. Company One's mission is "to be a source of Boston's best creative ideas, passionate energies and inspired collaborations," and it's been living up to that goal admirably. Works like Jesus Hopped the A Train and The Last Days of Judas Iscariot (both written by rising star Stephen Adly Guirgis) have received praise from critics and crowds alike. Challenging material, aggressively aimed at a younger audience—like a production of A Clockwork Orange with an original score by buzz-laden locals the Dresden Dolls—is Company One's stock-in-trade, and its stock is rising fast.

JAZZ CLUB

Regattabar

The Charles Hotel at One Bennett St., Cambridge, 617-661-5000, www.regattabarjazz.com

For over a decade now, the Regattabar has provided Boston locals with a place to hear some of the most exciting new sounds in jazz, as well as seasoned practitioners of standards and favorites. Having recently expanded its palette to include Latin, blues, rock and world music, the selection is now an even broader representation of Boston's tastes in music. The cozy setting (225 seats) and intimate lighting make this an ideal spot for first dates. And things get lively every year during the Regattabar's annual Jazz Festival, which just turned 21. This year's lineup indicated the Regattabar's jazz glasnost, featuring both folk legend Judy Collins and blues/rock great Bo Diddley. Don't fret, purists: Festivals come and go, but the Regattabar's monthly lineup provides ample material for jazz buffs old and new.

KARAOKE

Queeraoke at the Midway Café

3496 Washington St., Jamaica Plain, 617-524-9038

www.midwaycafe.com

Boasting a library of 20,000 songs and a rack of wigs to choose from, the Midway's Queeraoke has all the ingredients to guarantee a full house. On any given Thursday, you can catch fully decked-out Prince fans duetting with Dolly Parton wannabes, and an enthusiastic crowd cheering them on. Dyke Night Productions' Kristen Porter founded the event, eventually passing the baton (or mic, or some other totally nonphallic object) to Ange Romanska, who's run it ever since. While people come from across town to strut their stuff (or just revel in all the goofball antics), Queeraoke's got a distinctly neighborhood feel. Maybe it's something about the neighborhood (Jamaica Plain), or maybe it's something about the ambience ($2.50 PBR). Whatever it is, it's got us signing up to do a Cher number for the next set. Now who do we see about those wigs?

LOCAL ACTOR

Will LeBow

With nearly 50 productions under his belt at the ART, LeBow recently impressed critics, yet again, with his compelling performance as Garcin in No Exit. The show's novel shifting stage made for some challenging footwork, but LeBow's impressive balancing act was secondary to the performance itself. His Don Armado in the Huntington's Love's Labours Lost, a 180-degree turn from his No Exit role, was another triumph, pleasing critics and crowds alike. LeBow's Boston roots run deep; he moved here in 1977, and after three years with the Boston Shakespeare Company, he did a 13-year run in the Theater District's grand dame Shear Madness. LeBow also recently served as the narrator for the Boston Pops' Christmas Carol. Not bad for a Brooklyn

ADDITION TO THE SCENE

The Reel Bar in Allston

477 Cambridge St., Allston, 617-783-3222

It's not always a packed house when you go to the Reel Bar, but if you pick a good night, you'll have to think skinny to fit inside. This once-divey watering hole with not much going for it has morphed into—well, a slightly less divey watering hole, but one that also features some of the most fun nights out Allston has to offer. There's no pigeonholing the entertainment; if you dig local pop-punk, country DJs or alternative comedy, Reel Bar has a night you'd love. Cheap beer, a low cover, if any, and the chance to see something incredibly good (or at least incredibly memorable)—what more do you need? And if you don't see anything you like on the schedule, feel free to volunteer your opinions—the staff's open to suggestions.

PA's

www.paslounge.com

It had long been a neighborhood watering hole, but sometime around the middle of 2001, PA's manager Gerard Amaral decided to add a shot of life into his burgeoning strip of Somerville Avenue in Union Square. It was a bold move; Lilli's had folded, and the Sky Bar a bit farther up the road was still relatively new and struggling. But something about this low-key local bar clicked, and PA's has been hosting live bands ever since. With headliners like Elf Power, Sweden's Jens Lekman and local favorites Pants Yell!, PA's small-time image is being challenged by its own success.

GALLERY

Kidder Smith Gallery

www.kiddersmithgallery.com

This four-year-old has grown a lot of late. Emphasizing nonlocal work (the West Coast in particular) and "mid-career" artists has given its Newbury Street locale a shot in the arm. It's also doing its part to bring serious attention to Boston by regularly advertising in national mags like Art in America and ArtForum. But what about the art? We haven't been disappointed yet. Recent work by Cheryl Goldsleger, for example, uses architecture as the basis for a compelling examination of space and depth. Kidder Smith's curatorial choices may not be for everyone. It can tend toward the big, the bold and sometimes the brash, not exactly art that goes with the sofa (or even fits through the door). But we like the way it's shaken up Newbury Street's traditionalist tendencies, aiming at a slightly younger audience and establishing its rep with style and skill.

PLACE TO CATCH A RISING STAR
Wally's Café

427 Mass. Ave., Boston, 617-424-1408, www.wallyscafe.com

Vally's has a history of exposing Boston crowds to new and lented young musicians dating back to the 1950s, with ch noteworthy alumni as Roy Hargrove and Antonio lart. Founded in 1947 by Joseph—aka Wally—Walcott, e club was an early example of ebony and ivory in perfect armony. Wally promoted his events (featuring jazz giants ke Sarah Vaughan) at local colleges, attracting white kids hear the latest sounds in black music. Years later, as bigand jazz's popularity was waning, Walcott changed the afé's focus, drawing on the talents of students at Boston's usic schools like Berklee and the Boston and New Engnd conservatories. Today, Wally's remains a landmark in oston's musical history. It hosts live music every night of e year, and there's never a cover; the crowds and the perrmers all show up for the love of the music.

RECORD LABEL
Rounder Records

1 Camp St., Cambridge, 800-768-6337, www.rounder.com

ow do you compete with these kids today, who want ee music from their pop star idol of the month, downadable and iPoddable? Well, you don't. Instead, you nd of let them do their thing, and focus on a different owd—a crowd that doesn't care who's big on MTV ght now, but that does care about the new albums from tists they've been following for years. The venerable ounder Records (founded in 1970 and still going strong) has been following a different business model from the mega-major labels pretty much throughout its existence. Rather than try to churn out hit singles, it instead works with artists it likes—focusing more on getting the music right than on the bottom line. The rewards have been a loyal fan base, critical acclaim and actual increases in sales—something the big-time players must envy.

ROCK BAND
The Campaign for Real-Time

www.c4rt.com

Most bands start out intending to make music history. C4RT is no different, except it's doing it backwards. Which is to say, it's already famous in the future (about 200 years from now, to be specific), and the band's come back to our era to hustle things along a little. That's the band members' story, anyway, and they're sticking to it. Amusingly, this futuristic sextet rocks fairly retro, harking back to some of the 1980s' finest synth-centered New Romantic Euro-pop. Adding to that formula some new hooks and a new-millennium production sensibility (not to mention some straight-up rock guitar), C4RT pulled off a suspense-filled victory in the WBCN Rumble this year. But, of course, it knew in advance the outcome. It's just visiting from the future.

ROOTS ACT
Session Americana

www.sessionamericana.com

If you've been in Porter Square recently, you might've noticed some strangely familiar sounds wafting through the air. Starting at Toad, Session Americana's rustic concoction of traditional American standards has proven so popular that it required a trip down Mass. Ave. to the roomier Lizard Lounge. The group was born out of a simple enough idea: taking the egocentrism out of live performance and emphasizing songs by local friends, as well as delving deep into "the great American song bag." Its ethos proudly and profanely eschews "musical purity," which is why you'll hear old-time country next to bubblegum pop, Prince next to Merle Haggard. The participants' pedigrees are widely varied; all have roots in longtime local bands. But they bring a blank slate to Session Americana—no rock star prima donnas here. For a trip into America's past, as well as a glimpse at the almost famous, come on down for a session.

THEATER COMPANY

The stage is a harsh mistress; you don't get to stick around for 25 years unless you're treating her right. This year the Huntington celebrates a quarter-century of four-star service to Boston theater audiences, critics, fans and actors. Its production of Love's Labours Lost has garnered unsurprising accolades, and the Huntington is still moving onward and upward. The Calderwood Pavilion, its most recent addition, represents the Huntington's commitment to fostering new voices in theater. A spacious, 35,000-square-foot venue, it houses two theaters dedicated to showcasing emerging talent both on the boards and at the pen. Another novel program the Huntington has created is its Know the Law show, performed by kids for kids around Boston. Look for it—and its offshoot program, You Be the Judge—coming soon on DVD!

CLUTCH PERFORMANCE
Nobody

/e're sorry, but we've got to be hard-asses about this ne. No titles = no clutch performance. Maybe there ere microcosms of clutchness during the past year, but nless there's a banner being hoisted, it's hard to bestow ne vaunted title of Clutch. Are we spoiled by the past ouple of years? Perhaps. But that's where our expecta-ons are at these days, baby. Sorry, Boston sports teams; ke Trump does for an ex-wife, you've got to keep us ving in the manner to which we're accustomed. Give s another title, and then we'll tell you who's clutch.

'DO Jonathan Papelbon

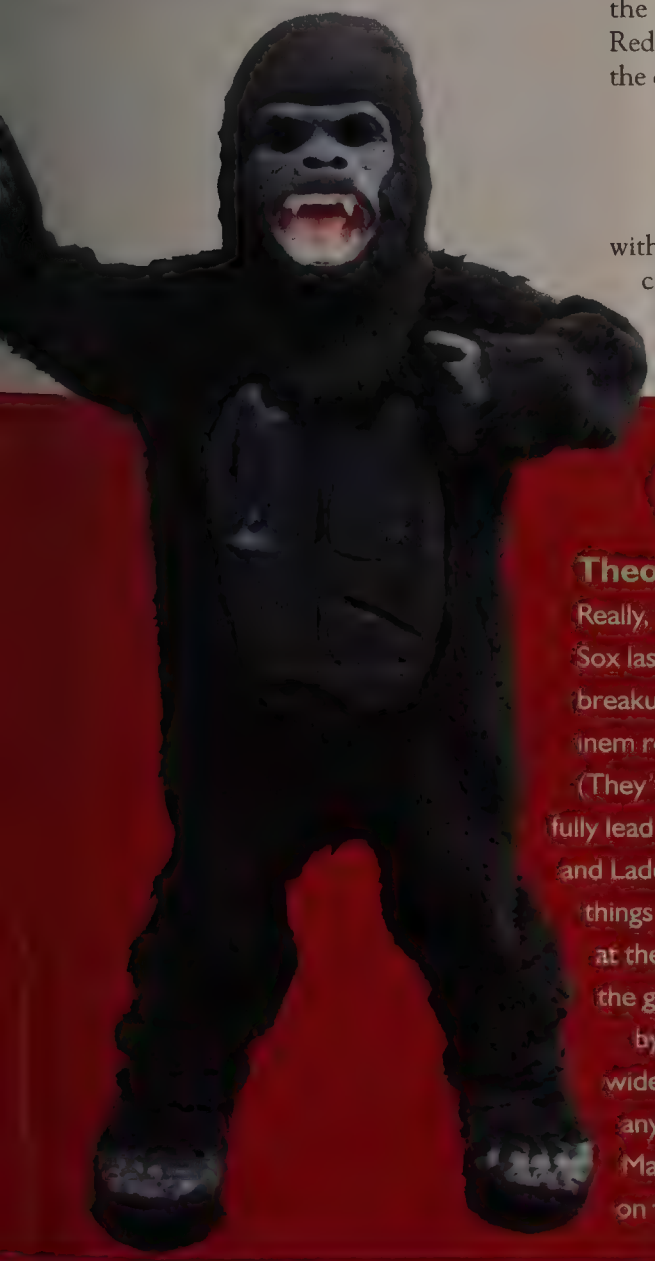
he Sox' young closer faced hot competition in this ategory thanks to Manny "Goldidreds" Ramirez, but apelbon takes the award for shaving his head into a lohawk, complete with horizontal spikes on the ack, à la Rick "Wild Thing" Vaughn from the movie lajor League. Strangely, he was forced to do this be-ause he pitched 10 straight scoreless innings to begin ne season (one would think that winning such a bet ould require someone else to shave his or her head, ut such is life for the new guy in a major league ullpen). The most encouraging thing about Papel-on's Wild Thing hair is the fact that it happened in the context of the new-look, supposedly Idiot-free Red Sox. Obviously, there are still a few Idiots left in the clubhouse. What a relief.



TRICK PLAY
The Doug Flutie Drop Kick

Nobody in the NFL had drop-kicked an extra point since 1941—until 43-year-old back-up quarterback Flutie did it against the Dolphins in the final game of the 2005 season. Said Adam Vinatieri after the game, "Flutie might've been there the last time it happened." It was the last play Flutie made in the NFL, and he went out with his head—and his leg—held high.

FIRE SALE
The Bruins

Jeremy Jacobs has apparently been hanging out with Florida Marlins owner Jeffrey Loria. Fresh off the crippling NHL strike, the Bruins rekindled fan interest by… trading Joe Thornton. At least they still have Sergei Samsonov. What? They traded him, too? Oh. In May, the Onion summed up the Bruins M.O. with the withering headline, "Bruins Sign Future Flyers All-Star to Three-Year Deal."

USE OF A GORILLA SUIT
Theo Epstein

Really, what the hell happened with Theo and the Sox last winter? That was the most bizarre breakup and subsequent reconciliation since Eminem remarried his estranged ex-wife, Kim. (They've since divorced again, which will hopefully lead to more songs not about playing Chutes and Ladders with Haley, but we digress.) First, things were cool with Theo and Lucchino. Then, at the last second, they weren't. Then there was the gorilla-suited escape from Fenway followed by months of exile, during which Theo was widely believed to have been pulling the strings anyway. And then Kirsten relapsed and Marissa died in a car accident! Wait, that was on the O.C. Forgive us for getting confused.

MVP
Tom Brady

Everyone has a different litmus test for an MVP award, but we're gonna go with a simple formula: Which player, if he left, would cause you to plunge into a dark funk and lose all hope for that team's season? While there are several worthy candidates—Pierce, Papi—only Brady fills that bill. When Vinatieri left, one of the most common reassurances heard around town was, "Well, it's not like we lost Brady." With Brady taking the snaps, the Pats once again look like they'll be in the hunt for the Lombardi trophy next January. If he weren't… banish the thought.

NAMES
The Patriots

How fun would it be to call a Patriots game? Here's a sample of some of the monikers you'd get to bandy about: Tully Banta-Cain, Jon Condo, Tebucky Jones, Hank Poteat. Wesley Britt is always welcome on the Gillette pitch: "I say, my good man, I intend to block you quite thoroughly throughout this upcoming set of downs!" You can shotgun a brewski while watching Bruschi read the shotgun. Jay-Z doesn't play for the Pats, but we do have Larry "H-to-the-" Izzo. Logan Mankins sounds like he should be about 6'4" and 307 pounds (he is). And of course, there's the man with the name so powerful that his replica jersey was banned by the NFL for a time: Randall Gay.

NEW ADDITION
Josh Beckett

Don't get us wrong, we were excited to hear about the Coco Crisp signing, but Beckett was the major prize of the Boston sports offseason. Beckett and Schilling provide a 1-2 punch to match any starting duo in the majors, the guy's a proven Yankee-slayer, he thrives under the wilting spotlight of Fenway Park, and best of all: He's only 26 years old. OK—maybe he sometimes gets a little too fired up. Beckett went through a couple of shaky starts at the beginning of the season, but he put his head down, kept burning up the airspace over home plate with high-90s heaters, and the wins started piling up. With Beckett in the rotation, Red Sox fans get a reminder every five games of why we should feel good about our chances come October.

ROOKIE
Ryan Gomes

When Kendrick Perkins and Al Jefferson succumbed to injury last winter, the Celtics' most promising rookie finally got a chance to log some minutes. And when he did, Gomes made the most of his opportunities—in the season finale, the all-time leading scorer for the Providence Friars showed he can get the job done at the NBA level, dropping 19 points on the Miami Heat—to put the finishing touches on a three-month run where he averaged an impressive 12.6 points and 7.6 rebounds a game. We hope he maintains the work ethic that helped him break into the starting rotation, and that next season Doc Rivers can find him a defined role where his skills can be put to use on a regular basis. He deserves a chance to shine.

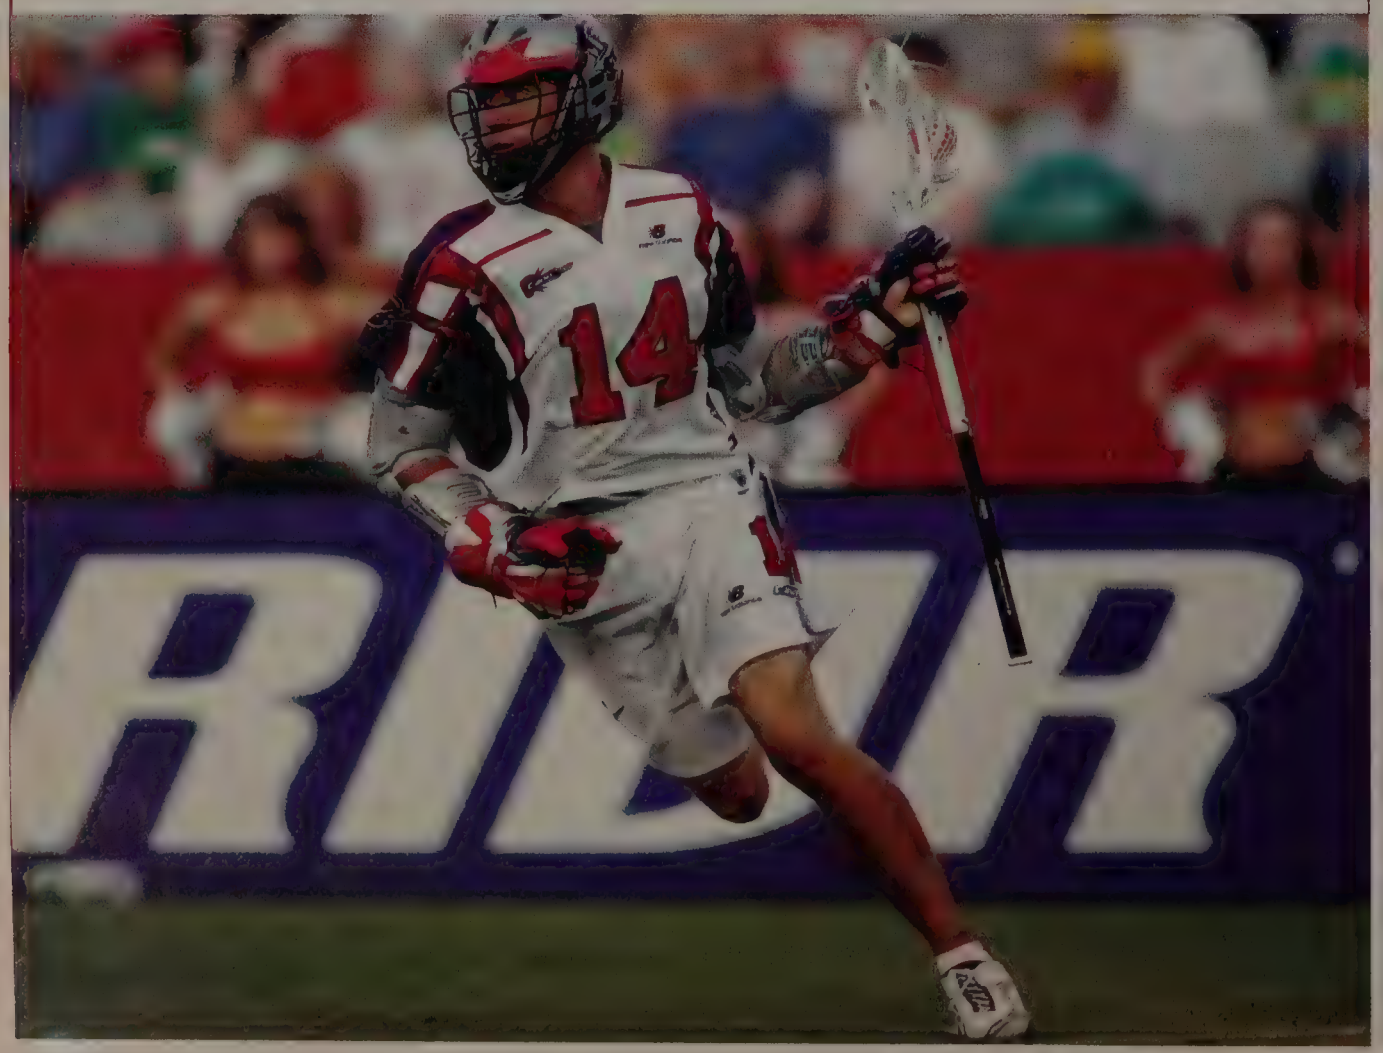
TIME-WILL-TELL DEAL
Bronson Arroyo for Wily Mo Peña

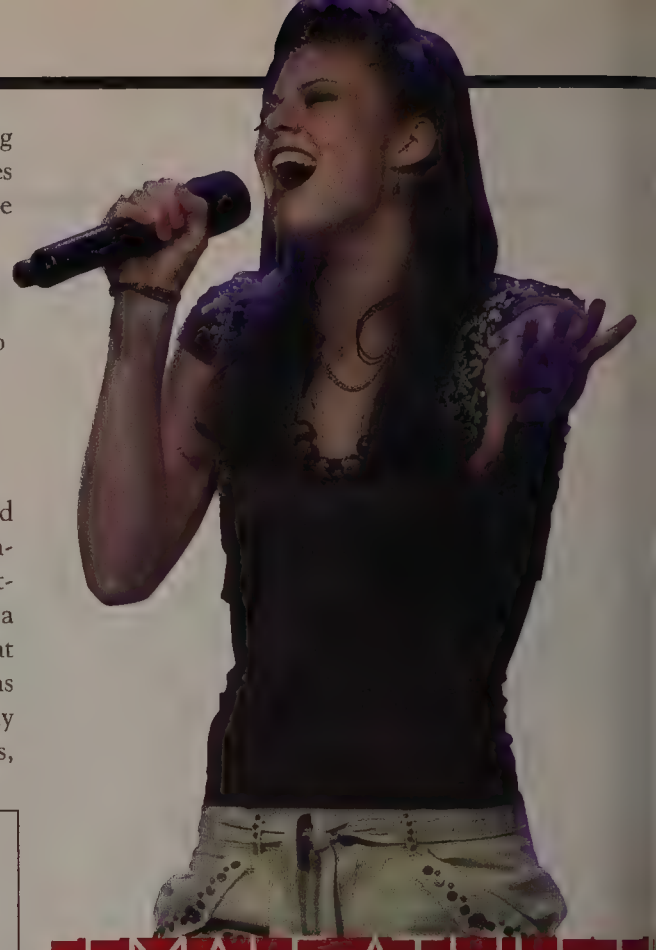
Will Wily Mo turn into the second coming of David Ortiz, or will Bronson Arroyo turn into the second coming of Pedro Martinez? So far, this deal is making us a little queasy: We traded a proven starting pitcher with a palatable three-year contract for a guy who uses a bat that looks like it was borrowed from the Looney Tunes' Gas House Gang, and strikes out more often than Randy Johnson at a speed-dating event. Like a lot of locals, we're big fans of Wily Mo's scary forearm tats and sc bat speed, but the absence of Arroyo leaves a big question mark in the five-slot of the starting rotat Every fifth game, we wonder who we'll find toeing rubber: Boomer? Lenny DiNardo? The Sausage Guy cidentally, through his first 70 innings pitching in a l uniform, Arroyo was 6-2 with a 2.29 ERA. You coul that by negotiating a hometown contract and then mediately trading him, the Sox screwed Arroyo over. could also say that, highlighted hair and propensit guitar-strumming notwithstanding, maybe it's a good not to mess with a guy named after Charles Bronson.

BOSTON ATHLETE YOU'VE NEVER HEARD OF

Conor Gill of the Boston Cannons

If Cannons attacker Conor Gill played in any of the Big Four pro sports leagues instead of Major League Lacrosse, he'd have legions of groupies and his autographed action photos would go for $100 and up at kiosks in local malls. But LAX is still a relatively small-time business, and so Gill's ascent to the top of the league has happened under the radar of most local sports fans. He was nasty in college—at the University of Virginia, he ended his career in second place on the ACC all-time list for assists—and he's nasty now. Gill was MLL Rookie of the Year in 2002, he's a three-time All-Star and he won the accurate-shot contest at last year's All-Star competition. Perhaps more important than his own shooting prowess is his ability to read the field and set the table for his teammates: Gill has led the league in assists for three years and counting. So get thee to Nickerson Field for a Cannons game one of these days. We guarantee you'll be able to get tickets.





FEMALE ATHLET

Ayla Brown

It turns out that the biggest hype-generator for BC women's hoops didn't come on the court, but on the stage, as 2006–2007 freshman Ayla Brown made it to Hollywood on American Idol. Normally, a high-school athlete faces big pressure when making the transition to a D-I college program—better competition, bigger time commitment, more eyes watching if you screw up. Well, no slight to the BC women's basketball team, but more people probably saw the 6'0" Brown compete on a single episode of Idol than the cumulative number who'll watch her play ball over the course of her BC career. And when it comes to trash talk, there's nothing an opposing player could dish out that's any worse than constructive criticism from Simon Cowell. The question now is whether Brown can take her maturity, hard-won in Hollywood, to the Conte Forum hardwood. We're thinking, Dawg, that BC got a hot one tonight! Seacrest out.

TRADE

Ricky Davis for Wally Szczerbiak

e Hamlet, Danny Ainge is mad only when the wind ws north-northwest. When the wind is southerly, he ws a stiff from a superstar. This trade didn't seem to ke sense at first, and caused another round of exas- ated sighs around town. But over the remainder of season, it began to come into focus. This was less ut what we got than what we got rid of, namely rk Blount. We took on the so-called "human ebola s," Michael Olowokandi, but only for a few months il his contract expired, giving us cap space to (hope- ly) sign a decent veteran free-agent to help Paul rce corral the talented group of young players assem- d for next year. And we've got Wally—a great sec- l banana if he can buy some new knees on the black rket. Now, Danny Ainge, step away from the tele- ne for at least half the season and let's see what pens.

VALIDATION OF TIM WAKEFIELD

The Josh Bard Experiment

The Red Sox had a theory: Anyone could catch Tim Wakefield's dancing knuckle balls, if given the time to learn, and Doug Mirabelli was frankly overqualified for the role of backup catcher. So Mirabelli was shipped to the Padres, and Josh Bard stepped into his shoes. Simply put, Bard was awful. He was on a pace to obliterate the major-league record for passed balls when the Sox traded him to San Diego, bringing back the only guy who's proven he can master the knuckleball. Mirabelli, aided by a police escort from Logan, made it to Fenway with minutes to spare, and set up shop behind home plate in time for Wakefield to tie down the Yankees. The media focused on Mirabelli's singular talent for catching the knuckler, but the Josh Bard Era also reminded us of the value of Tim Wakefield—when professional catchers can't even lay the leather on his pitches, you know the longest-tenured member of the Sox staff still has the magic.

BILL MUELLER PLEASANT SURPRISE AWARD

Tyrese Rice, Boston College Men's Basketball

While Boston College continues to elevate its men's hoops game (reaching the Sweet 16 in 2006 and making dates to play Kansas the next two seasons), the play of freshman guard Tyrese Rice bodes well for the Eagles' future. Last season, the young sharpshooter led the team in three-pointers (63)—despite playing off the bench. We're psyched to see what he can do once he's a starter, and we're thoroughly enjoying having a serious NCAA program right in our own backyard.

ECRET VEAPON

Mike Vrabel

Vrabel's a linebacker, yet he had three touchdown receptions last year—it's safe to say that defenses don't expect a linebacker to take the field in goal line situations, let alone become one of Tom Brady's favorite TD targets. People who have Daniel Graham or Benjamin Watson on fantasy teams might not love Vrabel's stat-stealing offensive exploits, but for Patriots fans, he's a fantastic X factor that other teams are going to have to think about all next season—whether he catches another touchdown or not.

ATTITUDE TURNAROUND

Paul Pierce

Two years ago, Paul Pierce was the sulking, petulant captain of a sinking ship. Last year, that ship had already sunk beneath the waves of mediocrity, as the Celts missed the playoffs despite playing in the stink-er-ooney Atlantic division. Yet Pierce was no longer pouting. He was positive. Was it maturity? Prozac? Who knows? Maybe Danny Ainge has convinced him that the prime of his career won't be wasted propping up a bunch of losers. Perhaps next year (we find ourselves using that phrase a lot when it comes to the Celtics), that sentiment goes from wishful thinking to reality. Pierce is ready to lead—the only question is whether his youthful supporting cast is ready to step up.

BATHROOM

28 Degrees

We're bestowing this coveted award on 28 Degrees not for what its bathroom is, but for what it was — which is to say unisex, at least at the sinks. This arrangement worked fine for about six months, until this spring, when the Board of State Examiners of Plumbers and Gas Fitters decided that in the year 2006, men and women just aren't ready to wash hands next to one another. The rest of the bathroom's intriguing design — teak wood, a blue-lit wall evoking waves on an ocean, and a panel of water flowing across the ceiling — is still intact, but it's now marred by a giant mirror segregating the sink space into defined male and female sections. But props to 28 Degrees for trying to push the envelope, even if they found out the hard way that frip-frappery and tomfoolery of that sort crash like a defective whirligig when brought to the attention of the learned struldbrugs of the Hub Red Tape Council.

CASUALTY OF THE LARRY SUMMERS FALLOUT

Harvard Crimson Managing Editor Zachary Seward

It's common in the sports world for talented coll underclassmen to quit school early to go pro. Th less common in the realm of professional journali but former Harvard Crimson managing editor Zach Seward would want to consider entering the 2 Journalist Draft, if there were such a thing. Sewa Watergate, at this point in his career, is the L Summers saga. Seward was the one who nearly brol huge story last February when he reported that S mers had fired faculty dean William C. Kirby. (A turned out, Kirby had resigned). Perhaps Seward overcommitted to his role at the Crimson, becaus failed a tutorial and was subsequently hande mandatory one-year leave of absence from the sch But if his academics weren't good enough for Harv Seward's reporting was good enough for a little p called the Wall Street Journal. Three weeks after suspension began, Seward shared a byline in the W breaking the latest news in a story he'd been cove for months—Larry Summers' resignation.

GRACE UNDER FIRE

Larry Summers

Embattled ex-Harvard president Larry Summers guy who tells it like it is, but apparently should've watched the movie PCU (for "Politic Correct University") before taking office, bec his no-B.S. approach to administration eventu put him on the outs with segments of the facult arts and sciences. As Alan Dershowitz wrote Globe op-ed supporting him, Summers "commi the cardinal sin against the academic hard left: expressed politically incorrect views regarding g der, race, religion, sexual preference and the n tary." And so, despite the accomplishments of brief tenure—such as guiding the school's plan expand into Allston—Summers' managerial proach was ultimately his undoing. As he discu his resignation outside his office that cold Febr day, Summers had a look on his face that seeme say, "None of you are nearly as smart as you th you are, and you will come to rue the day you di me from my post. I'll see you in Hell." Actu he'll see the faculty of arts and sciences back campus in the fall of 2007, when he plans to re to Harvard as a professor.

RANDOM ANIMATED LIGHTED PEDESTRIANS

The Random Animated Lighted Pedestrians on the Frt Point Channel Pedestrian Footbridge

"Jlian Walking" and "Suzanne Walking," on display through October thanks to the ICA, are without ques- ti our favorite random animated lighted pedestrians in all of Boston. The great thing about them is that the rh-hour crowd is so inured to their presence that nobody even looks twice as they stroll past these glori- o ly incongruous figures, perpetually making their way across the bridge, stuck on their invisible treadmills.

HOT NEIGHBORHOOD

The North End

Ce of the city's oldest neighborhoods is enjoying a re- nssance thanks to cool, nontraditional restaurants like Nptune Oyster and Mare, new boutiques like Prima Enna and in-jean-ius, and the removal of the Central Aery, which has served to reconnect the North End wh the rest of the city. The revitalized Columbus Park o the water looks great, particularly at night when the tr lises are lighted with blue lights. Combine the infu- sin of fresh businesses with the persistence of everything w ve loved about the North End for years (summer street fe ivals, Mike's Pastry, overheard snippets of conversa- ti in Italian), and you've got a place unlike any other in Boston—or, for that matter, anywhere else.

PARTY YOU WEREN'T INVITED TO

The Barneys Opening Party

What was so cool about the Barneys opening party last March? Well, there was the requisite noshing and drinks, a live music from the O'Jays ("Love Train"). But what re lly made the Barneys party a major topic of conversa- ti around town was the buzz itself. The number of invi- tees was capped at 700, and the guest list comprised local dignitaries, vendors and longtime customers who'd already dropped some major coin at the Barneys in Chestnut Hill. Those Barneys buddies received an invitation in the mail, which became something like the Willy Wonka Golden Ticket as the event approached. But did the party itself live up to the hype? We could tell you, but then we'd have to strangle you with an Hermès scarf.

PLACE FOR A FIRST DATE

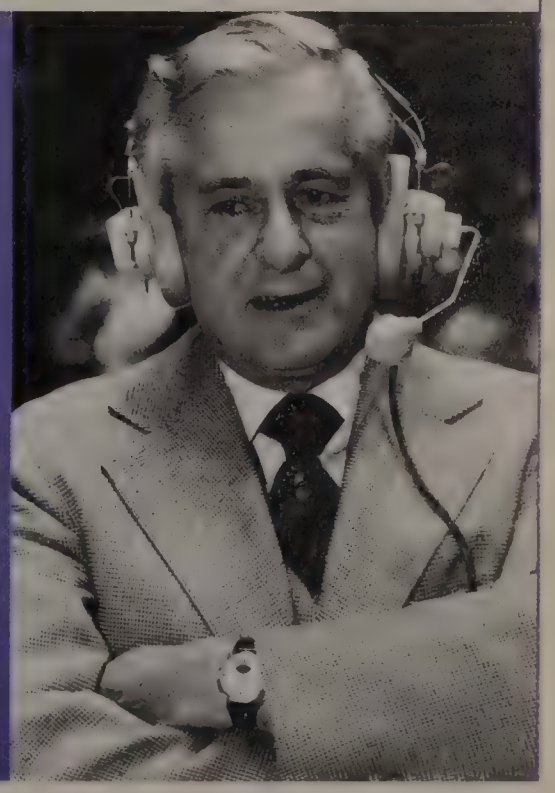
The Comedy Connection

It's hard to have a bad date when you're laughing the whole time, and going to see a comedian is invariably more fun

MOST MISSED

Curt Gowdy

As their play-by-play announcer from 1951 to 1965, Curt Gowdy became known as "the voice of the Red Sox." He was there for many of the major moments not just in Sox history, but in sports history. Gowdy called Ted Williams' final at-bat. He called Hank Aaron's 715th home run. He called 13 World Series, 16 MLB All-Star Games, seven Super Bowls (including Super Bowl I) and 24 Final Fours. Along the way, he won 13 Emmys and a Peabody Award. Gowdy died Feb. 20 at age 86, and despite his longtime ties to Wyoming, where he grew up (and where a state park is named after him), his funeral was held at Trinity Church, barely a mile from the baseball park where he laid the foundation for one of the greatest careers in broadcasting.



MEMORIAL

The Other Whitey in Southie

Down near the intersection of Farragut and East 6th in Southie stands a monument to Whitey—no, not that Whitey. We're talking about Robert "Whitey" McGrail, former South Boston town greeter, who just happens to be immortalized in the flyest outfit ever carved into a slab of black marble: a white tux with tails, white shoes, a boutonniere, a top hat with a feather in it and a cane with a ribbon tied around it. Best. Memorial duds. Ever. Our only complaint about this memorial is that it's not on the Common, where it belongs.

than you'd expect. Sitting through an hour and a half of comedy gives you a crash course not only in your date's sense of humor, but also in his or her sensibilities: Did she just laugh or squirm when Doug Stanhope dropped the line about his dad washing his mouth out with soap to remove traces of DNA? (Which raises another point—go to the raunchiest show possible. It's a bonding experience.) The only peril of the first-date comedy show is that after watching someone like Gary Gulman, you may come off as uninteresting by comparison.

PLACE TO MAKE OUT

The Back of a Cab

Taxi drivers get the shaft in Boston thanks to a screwed system where a few cab companies control all the busir and the drivers struggle to cover their costs. So the le you can do is brighten up a cabbie's evening (or lunch morning) by making out with someone back there. Su the back of a cab is sorta gross, but everyone needs to m out in a gross environment once in a while. It height the appeal of non-gross environments, such as your b room, which hopefully will look like the Taj Mahal a you step from the back of a urine-stained ex-police car.

REASON TO BE GLAD WE'RE NOT CLOSER T THE CANADIAN BORDER

The U.S. Customs Story of Gregory Depres

Last year, Canuck-run-amok Depres sauntered up the border crossing at Calais, Maine, carrying the f lowing items: a sword, a hatchet, a knife, brass knucl and a bloody chainsaw. You might suppose from t that customs officials arrested him immediately, a bloody chainsaw is the sort of thing that some peo find incriminating (also, he claimed he was a Mar working on President Bush's security detail). Inste they sent him on his merry way into the U.S., where was eventually arrested in Mattapoisett and char with a grisly double-murder back in Canada. U.S. r resentatives Steven Lynch and Edward Markey sub quently sent a letter to Department of Homeland Se rity secretary Michael Chertoff that effectively s "Hey Chertoff, how about, in the future, not turn deranged psychos loose in Massachusetts?" As any who's driven the roads here knows, we have enough those already.

UNCONVENTIONAL USE OF A HORSE

State Trooper John Linquata

OK, so Staties help direct traffic at Patriots games. A Boston cops sometimes attend those games. The res Horse head-butts! So claimed Boston officer Lawre Calderone in a case that went to federal court last fall. sically, Calderone was crossing Route 1—but not i crosswalk. This drew the ire of the horse-riding Linqu who (Calderone claimed) deliberately pulled back on reins to cause equine-human noggin-to-noggin cont Best quote of the story goes to Linquata's lawyer, B Rogal, who told the court that his client would never m his horse head-butt someone, because "he wouldn't in pain on the horse. He respects the horse." Aww, snap!

PLACE TO BREAK UP

The Boston Marathon

Here's what you do. Head to a crowded, yet not too crowded, section of the course (maybe somewhere in Brookline). Say what you need to say, then whip a race number out of your pocket, pin it to your shirt, jump the fence and make like Rosie Ruiz all the way to Copley Square. Your new ex won't be able to catch up with you because of the ridiculous crowds and closed streets. By the time he or she reaches Copley Square, you'll already be at home chillin' under an aluminum foil blanket with your Kenyan rebound.

BATTLE OF THE HIGHBROW HOSTS
Christopher Lydon vs. Tom Ashbrook

In this corner, Christopher Lydon, whose program airs on public radio's WGBH-FM (he once denounced WGBH television for canceling the evening news broadcast he anchored) to do battle against public radio's WBUR (the station he once denounced for stealing his program The Connection). And in this corner, Tom Ashbrook, whose own show replaced The Connection at WBUR. Lydon tends to draw out opinions from listeners, whereas Ashbrook wraps up a rambling caller with "Got it!" So much for the differences. Otherwise, it's pretty much two inquisitive Yale grads covering the usual "big issues." So why has WGBH put Lydon's Open Source up against the nightly rerun of Ashbrook's On Point, Monday through Thursday at 7 pm—coincidence or revenge programming? You make the call.

COLLEGE RADIO STATION
WERS-FM

Unlike radio stations that just happen to be at a college, WERS is the real deal. Students play the music, report the news, produce the talk and help manage the station. While certain professionally run (but campus-based) stations have commercial-level promotional budgets, WERS relies almost entirely on word of mouth. So how did WERS build a larger audience than even commercial stations like WFNX? Why does the 1 share drawn by Emerson's little-station-that-could compare so favorably with public radio behemoth WGBH's 1.9? And where can a station with folk, jazz, reggae, techno, soul, a capella, show tunes, children's music, news, talk and sports expect to find an audience? Where else but in Boston?

EXAMPLE OF A LOCAL TV AD YOU CAN'T IGNORE
Bob's Discount Furniture

Love him or loathe him, if you watch TV in Boston, you know him. In the past few years, Bob Kaufman of Bob's Discount Furniture fame has become as ubiquitous as Bernie and Phyl, and even Eliot and Barry. True, his call of "Come on down" comes straight from Bob Barker. But even if the Crazy Eddie–meets–Wayne's World approach makes

TV ROYALTY

Rachel Dratch and Amy Poehler, Saturday Night Live

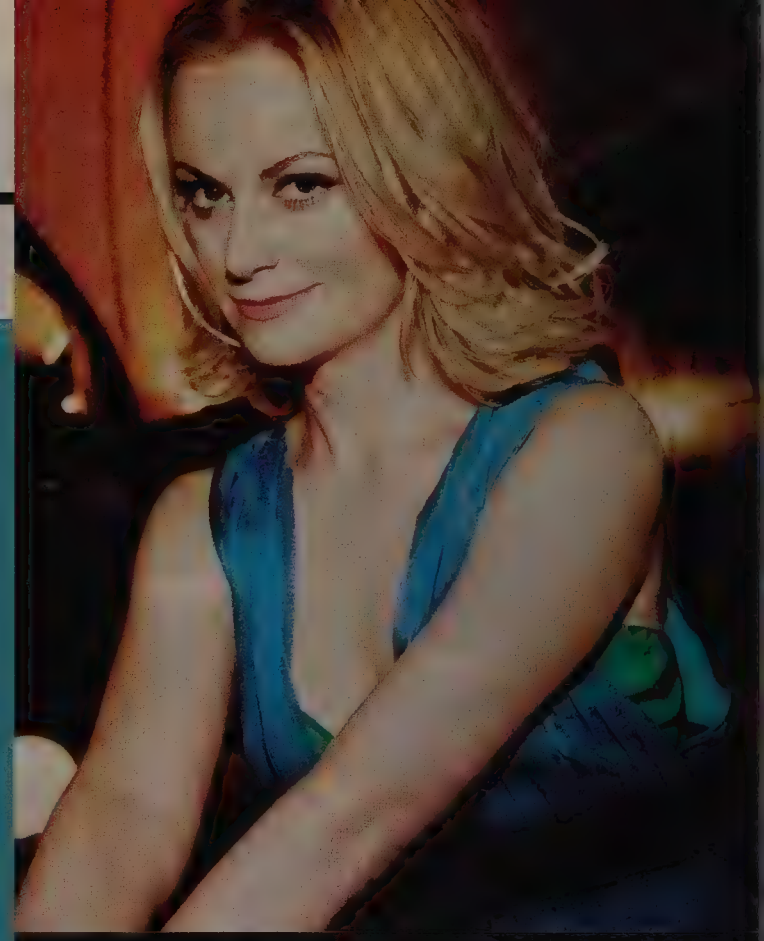
With few exceptions, New England's SNL connection hasn't compared to that of improv incubators like Chicago. Once you get past Jane Curtin and Adam Sandler, the list of New Englanders thins out fast. That all changed when Denise "Zazu" McDonough (aka Lexington's Rachel Dratch) first made out with former SNL cast member Jimmy Fallon in the bleachers of Fenway. Burlington's Amy Poehler, the second performer ever to be promoted to repertory player during her first season, added a second Boston accent. Now Dratch (the longest-tenured female cast member in the show's history) may be moving on to a sitcom, and Poehler can't be far behind. But for Boston, their success has been, how do you say? Wicked pissah!



NEIGHBORHOOD NEWSPAPE

Dorchester Reporter

In this age of the corporately owned "hometown" newspaper, an indep dent weekly like the Dorchester Reporter looks almost old-fashioned. Th low-tech layout, the ads from local pols, the news of the week from the Boys & Girls Club—all are signs of a townie touch. Yet the Reporter leav none of the big stories from Boston's largest and most diverse neighbor hood to the dailies. The latest wave of gun violence, the fate of local parishes and community reaction to the search for a new police commi sioner were all front-page news. So was a widely documented visit by B Affleck scouting the 'hood for his upcoming film Gone, Baby, Gone. The porter's version just happened to focus more on a different star: "Dot's most celebrated novelist," Dennis Lehane.

BROADCAST PIONEER

Liz Walker, CBS4

It's not easy to be real as a TV news anchor. Reveal too much of yourself and you lose credibility, too little and you're a robot. Since she arrived at WBZ-TV (now CBS4) in 1980, Liz Walker has been simultaneously empathetic, natural, objective and professional. Yet her compelling personality always suggested another side waiting to emerge. Her new show, Sunday with Liz Walker, tells the rest of the story, from spiritualism (Walker recently graduated from Harvard Divinity School) to social activism (the prevention of AIDS, breast cancer, homelessness and domestic violence; support for the women of Sudan and victims of genocide in Darfur). Sunday's got elements of Oprah and Chronicle, with a focus on serving the community. More impressively, it's all Liz

Jordan's Furniture look like Roche-Bobois, the pitch indisputably moves furniture. "We did no business a few short years ago," Kaufman acknowledges, "versus eight figures today." Maybe it's just our nostalgia for Dan Ackroyd's legendary Bass-O-Matic salesman, but when Bob says of his ads, "Some people love them, some people hate them, but if you want to insult me, tell me you're bored," we can only reply, "Mission accomplished."

KISS-OFF TO HOWARD STERN AND DAVID LEE ROTH

Matt Siegel, WXKS-FM KISS 108

Matt Siegel has always been a ladies' man, but in his 25th year as the host of KISS 108's morning drive show, it was a couple of dudes who gave him the best gift of all. First there was Howard Stern. Few local listeners who didn't follow Stern to satellite stuck with WBCN. Ratings dropped like a rock, from second place under Stern 15th with his mercifully short-lived replacement, Da Lee Roth. Matty was there to pick up the spoils, KISS vaulted to the top of the FM ratings. A few m bers of Stern's overwhelmingly male audience switche KISS, but the vast majority of Matty's surge came f even higher shares of women—proving once again Matty's listeners are loyal to the core.

SPORTS COLUMNIST
Bob Ryan, Boston Globe

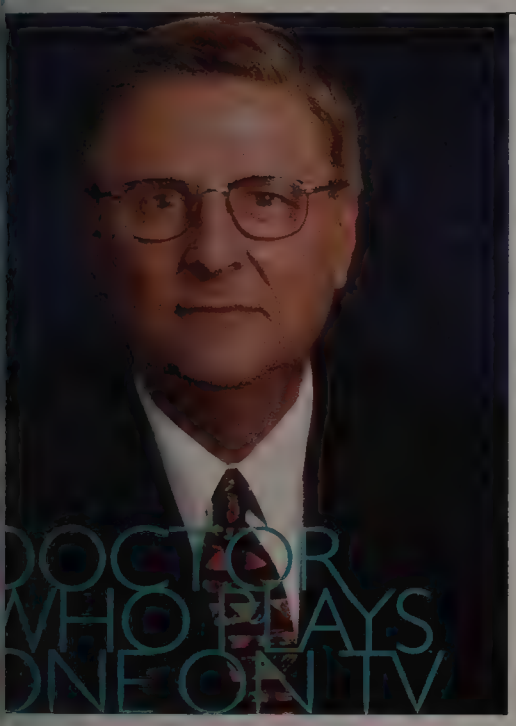
ob Ryan has ruffled some feathers in recent years, with a ries of, let's say, questionable comments about the likes Amelia Earhart, Joumama Kidd and the Vanderbilt en's basketball team. But while Ryan's shoot-from-the-p style periodically lands him in hot water, it's also part what makes him the best. In a profession where writers e supposed to distance themselves from the fans, the -year Globe veteran and BC grad still writes with the ssion of a 22-year old trying to break into the busi-ss—especially when he tackles his beloved Boston Celtics. So far, 2006 has been a relatively quiet year for Ryan, but that's just given us a chance to appreciate his encyclopedic knowledge of sports, his flair for writing and his commendable charity work on behalf of at-risk youth and the homeless. Despite Ryan's history of controversial comments, it's impossible to think of a sportswriter who's more consistently on the ball.

TV SPORTSCASTER
Mike Lynch, WCVB-TV

If you believe a recent poll conducted by Boston Sports Media Watch, Mike Lynch should probably be considering a run for president in 2008. WCVB's principal sports anchor has a set of high positives (he was rated the No. 1 local TV sports personality) and low negatives that should have Hillary Clinton and Mitt Romney quivering in their boots. Bob Lobel may receive more press (both good and bad), but Lynch is happy to be known for High Five, a weekly segment recognizing local high school athletes, which he brought to Channel 5 upon his arrival in 1985. Wearing his Harvard roots beneath his jersey, not on his sleeve, Lynch is a regular guy who brings intelligence to a field where it's increasingly rare.



Dr. Timothy Johnson, WCVB-TV

Liz Walker and WCVB's medical editor have more in common than their status as fixtures of Boston television. Dr. Timothy Johnson shares Walker's strong spiritual side: He graduated from seminary before opting for a career in medicine. By the time he began his second career at Channel 5 in 1972, Johnson already had appointments at Harvard and Mass. General, but his affable bedside manner made him a natural for television, and ABC named him its medical editor as well. Johnson still calls Greater Boston home, and he still has a higher calling. As point man for WCVB's series "Health Coverage: Uncovered," Johnson helped unite politicians on health care for all in Massachusetts. Dr. Tim is just what the doctor ordered for this brusque age of HMOs: a dose of Jimmy Carter's healing wisdom and a dose of the Mr. Rogers' neighborly kindness. May he continue his house calls for years to come.

TV WEATHERMAN
Pete Bouchard, WHDH-TV

Following the storm over the sudden disappearance of veteran chief meteorologist Todd Gross from WHDH, Pete Bouchard has proven to be a silver lining. Bouchard shares Gross' passion for forecasting, but he replaces his predecessor's nerdy, know-it-all delivery with a lighter approach. The song lyrics and cheeky humor that Bouchard works into his Web forecasts reflect the amiable personality seen on television—which isn't to suggest that viewers don't take him seriously. Since joining WHDH in 2002, Bouchard told the Boston Globe that he's received death threats from two viewers who wanted to hold him responsible for inaccurate forecasts that spoiled their plans. "I'm going to beat you until you don't move, then beat you some more," one former viewer promised—obviously a fair-weather fan.

BIGGEST BUY BY A BOSTON COMPANY

Boston Scientific

For a while, Boston Scientific was best known for surviving the potentially crippling recall of its heart stents. Earlier this year, the Natick-based life sciences company changed all that by pulling off a business coup worthy of an HBS case study. After Johnson & Johnson tried for more than a year to rope up the elusive Guidant—a move that would've altered the heart device market significantly—Boston Scientific swooped in and made an offer of its own. Back and forth things went until Guidant finally decided to take BS' $27 billion deal, an agreement that ensures this Bay State company will be a major force in medical devices for years to come.

BIGGEST SALE OF A BOSTON COMPANY

Reebok to Adidas

The sneaker wars? They're still fighting the sneaker wars? They are indeed. Even after Nike's 2003 acquisition of Converse angered Chuck Taylor All Star purists; even after Michael Jordan retired and took some of the air out of Nike's swoosh. Today, the battle is as much about fashion and hip-hop as it is about sole-cushioning and cross-training, which is why Adidas reached across the pond and acquired Canton-based Reebok. Together, Reebok and Adidas had 2004 sales of $11 billion, not too far behind Nike's $13.7 billion. Now, industry analysts say Reebok's strength among urban fashionistas and Adidas' core base of European footballers could make it a global threat. It bears watching, as they say. But whatever happens, the sad reality is that Reebok is now officially another FBAC—Former Boston Area Company.

WORST SCREWING OF THE LITTLE GUY

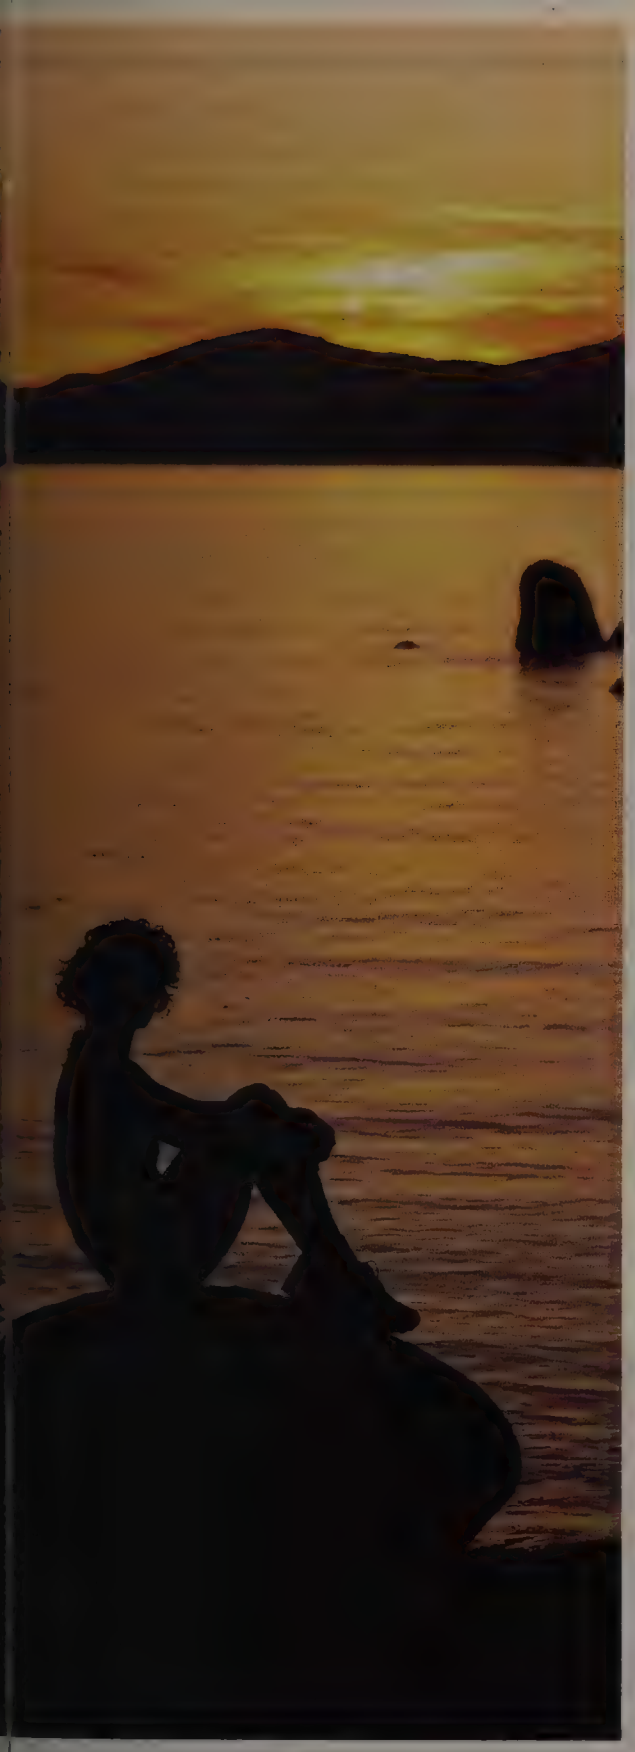
Littlest Bar

Reports of the Littlest Bar's demise may have been a bit premature. The bar is still going strong at least as strong as a 38-seat, 400-square-foot hole-in-the-wall tucked away on a Downtown Crossing side street can go. A bartender bearing a fresh-off-the-boat brogue offered a friendly "come on down" when asked if the pub is still in business. Littlest is living on borrowed time, however. The Abbey Group's plan to build 150 condos atop the parking garage structure that houses the Littlest means the pub will have to go. Abbey has said it would somehow mark the Littlest's legacy in the new project, and the bar's owner may seek out a new—and larger—site, but like all good things, the Littlest will remain alive and well in many hazy memories.

BIGGEST END OF AN ERA

Jack Connors' retirement from Hill, Holliday

When Jack Connors Jr. walked into the newsroom of the Boston Globe a decade ago, even hardened city editors practically leapt to their feet to make sure he was well taken care of. It wasn't just that as founding partner and chairman of the city's most v erable advertising firm, Hill, Holliday, he could m or break the publication's budget. Connors had l before earned their respect for his longevity (he'll tire after 38 years at the firm), for his extensive ci leadership and for making Hill, Holliday a model e ployer, putting liberal personal leave policies in pl



The other women's cancer: Why silence is deadly

OVARIAN CANCER

This year, nearly 22,000 women will be diagnosed with ovarian cancer and 16,000 will die from the disease. Because the symptoms of this silent disease are easily overlooked, 70% of women are diagnosed too late for treatment to be effective. In fact, only one in five of all ovarian cancers are discovered in the early, most treatable stage – before the cancer has spread outside of the ovaries when it would be 90% treatable. Fewer than half of all women are alive five years after the diagnosis.

Know the symptoms of ovarian cancer

Identifying ovarian cancer at its earliest stage can help improve survival.

- Abdominal pressure, swelling, discomfort (Clothes fit too tight)
- Nausea, indigestion, or gas
- Urinary or bowel problems: Urinary frequency, constipation or diarrhea
- Abnormal vaginal bleeding or discharge
- Unusual fatigue or fever
- Unexplained weight loss or gain
- Shortness of breath
- Pain: back pain or pain during intercourse

While these symptoms also represent common problems that affect most women at different times, it's important to be aware of them. If you have one or more of these symptoms and if they persist for three weeks or more, see your doctor immediately.

BOSTON COMPANY YOU'VE NEVER HEARD OF

Eaton Vance

Ask someone from Boston to name the most successful mutual fund company in the city, and most will tell you it's Fidelity. Some might even come up with Putnam Investments, which got a big portion of its 20 minutes of fame for all the wrong reasons after the market-timing scandal broke in 2004. By some measures, however, including stock market performance, the best mutual fund company in these parts is Eaton Vance. The difference is that Eaton keeps a low profile and operates in a narrow and targeted niche, with a heavy emphasis on tax-exempt and closed-end mutual funds. For a while, Eaton had the distinction of having the best stock returns of any U.S. company over the previous 25 years. With a market capitalization of $3.3 billion, it's not a giant, but the company has become a darling of the business press, with both the Boston Globe and Boston Business Journal singling it out in the past year or so. Eaton Vance is known as a great place to work and has focused on growing in Boston, a sharp contrast to Fidelity, which has been called out lately for moving many of its jobs out of Beantown.

long before they became fashionable. Even his decision to sell the local shop to New York–based IPG in 1998—for a reported $75 million—couldn't dent his image. The bad news is the city is losing an advertising icon, something the city's already depleted marketing corps can ill afford. The good news is that Connors has said he'll continue in some of his other roles in the city, including serving as chairman of Partners HealthCare.

BIGGEST EXECUTIVE WINDFALL

Paul Fireman, Reebok

To paraphrase the old Saturday Night Live skit, the snea business has been very, very good to Paul Fireman. It's unusual for CEOs to get platinum parachutes during quisitions, but thanks to stocks and options accumula during his tenure at Reebok, Fireman was in especia good position to capitalize. Adidas agreed to pay ab $3.8 billion for Reebok, and since Fireman and his w owned some 17.5 percent of the company, the family i line for about $650 million of the price tag. Unlike so CEO pay flaps, however, no one is suggesting Firen didn't earn his pay day. After all, he started as the U.S. tributor of U.K.-based Reebok way back in 1979, bou out the parent company five years later and then p ceeded to turn Reebok into a globally recognized br that actually took market share away from Nike.

BIGGEST FLOP

Terminal A at Logan

As the first new terminal space at Logan in 30 years—perspective, Eastern Airlines was still going strong at time—Terminal A was a bona fide Big Deal for Bost airport. Delta pumped an estimated $385 million into project, with MassPort kicking in another $88 mill worth of new infrastructure. Businesses lined up to t space in the terminal, with Legal Sea Foods, Jas White's Summer Shack and the Lyons Group's Ga On! all setting up shop. Only problem: When the rib was cut, the passengers didn't exactly flood into the minal. A number of gates still aren't being used, and s businesses called on MassPort to renegotiate their lea For its part, Logan is telling tenants to be patient. W not? In airports, delays come with the territory.

SIGN OF HARD TIMES

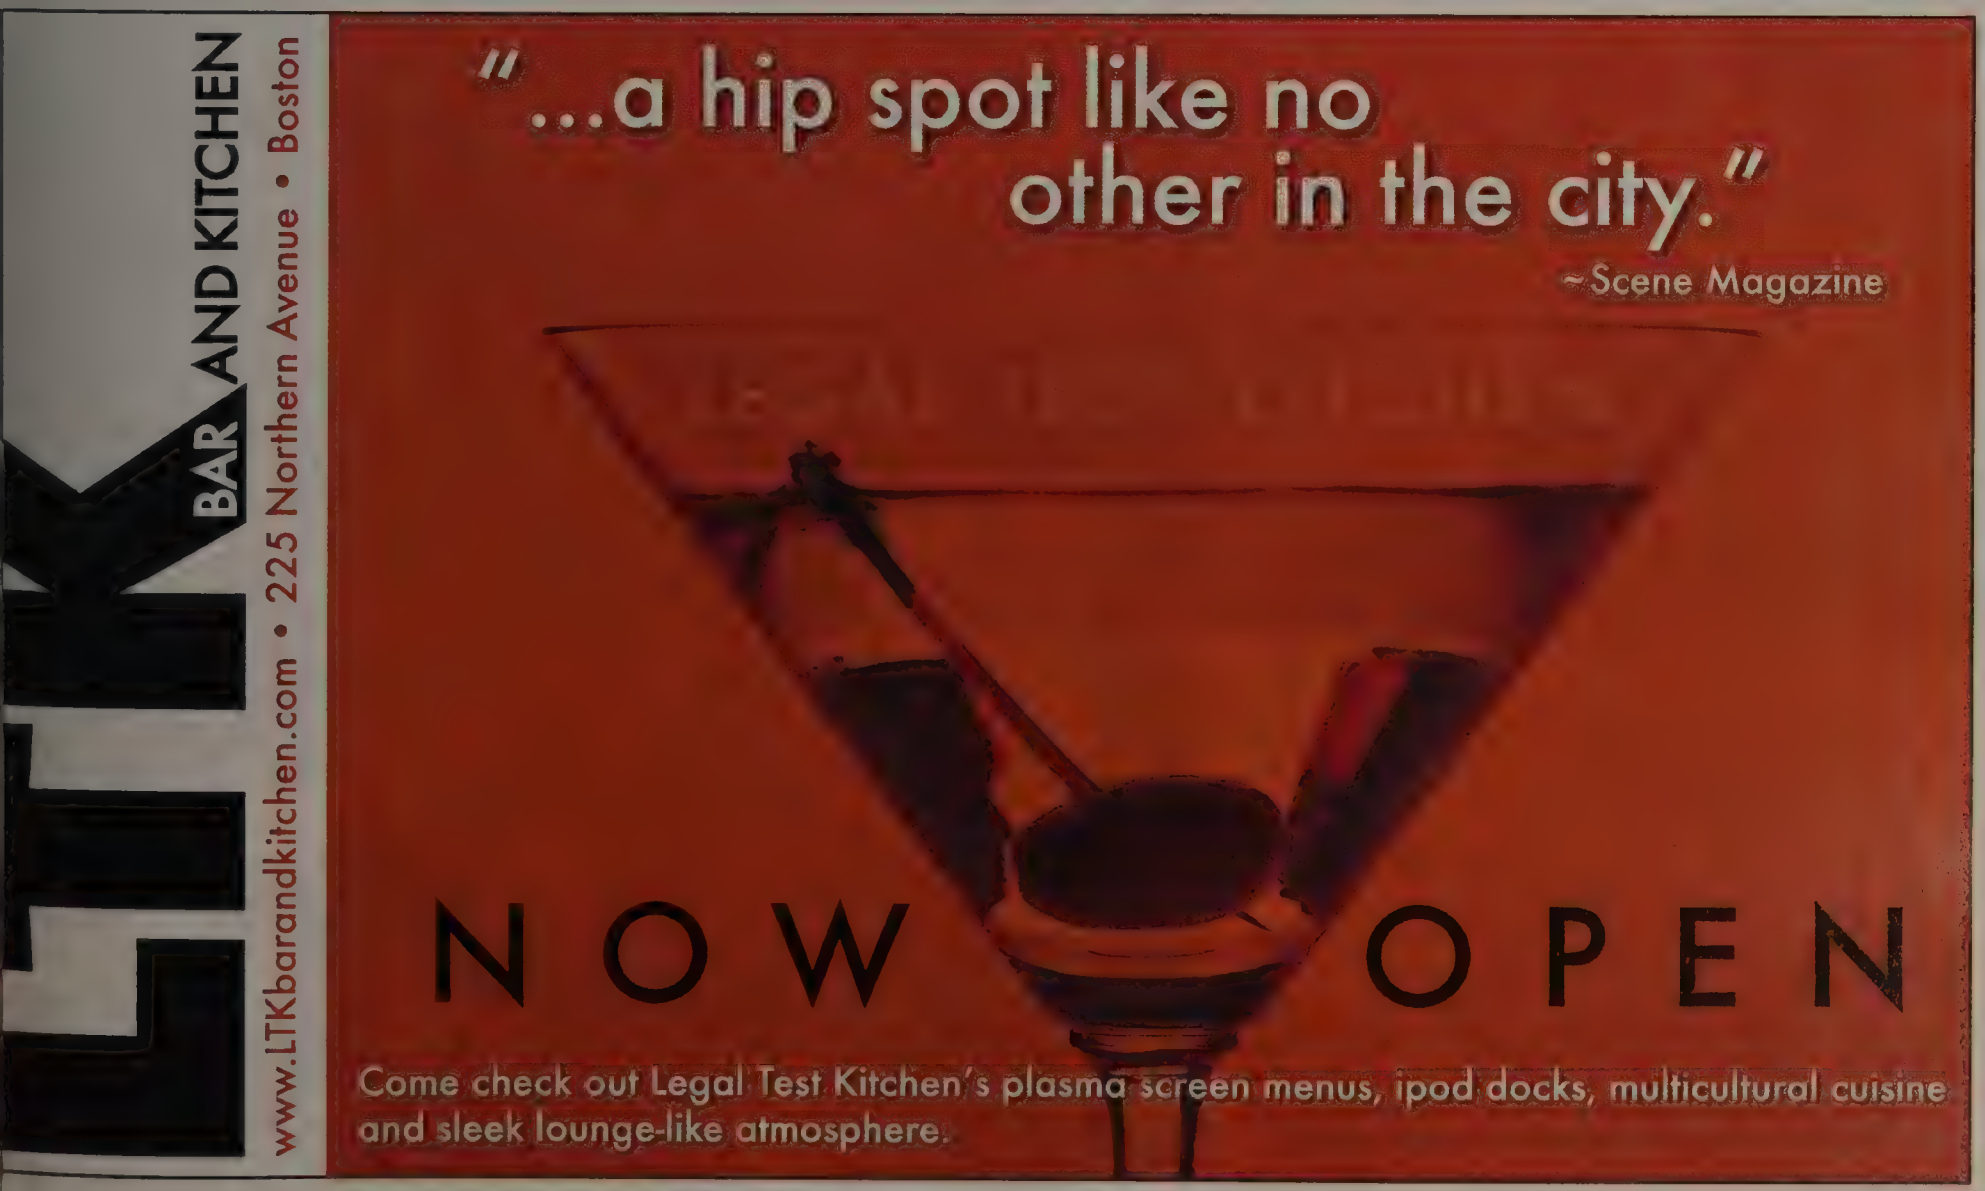
Gas prices

Nothing grumpies up the populace faster than gas prices that start with a three. It wasn't so bad after Hurricane Katrina drove prices through the roof: After all, paying a premium to pump was easily preferable to the flooding and evacuation experienced on the Gulf Coast. But when ExxonMobil and other oil companies started reporting profits in the $10 billion range, things started to get ugly. It got so bad in Mass. that lawmakers even proposed repealing the gas tax, which simply served to highlight how shortsighted politicians really are. More recently, stories have been creeping up about "pump rage," in which SUV drivers who have to fork over $60 to fill up take out their anger on gas station attendants. The upside: When prices dropped all the way down to $2.90 a gallon, it suddenly seemed like we were getting a bargain.

ing from sources that included, in addition to the usual array of venture capitalists, a company with just three letters in its name: AOL. The significance is much bigger than all the acronyms, of course, because behind AOL sits Time Warner, with its TV networks and movie studios. Another advantage? Brightcove's pedigree: Founder and CEO Jeremy Allaire sold his previous startup, Allaire Corp., to Macromedia for $360 million back in 2001. Some analysts believe the linkup puts Brightcove at the front of a crowded pack.

MOST INTRIGUING SPINOFF
Podzinger

BBN Technologies has always been one of those companies that's most comfortable working behind the scenes. A major contractor for government agencies, including the Department of Defense, BBN's credited with inventing the precursor to the Internet; legend has it that the man who sent the first e-mail in history still works at the company's Cambridge headquarters. BBN has spun off companies before, most notably when it set up Internet consultancy Genuity, which had a rocket-like rise and fall during the dot-com days. Now it's nudging another nursling out of the nest. This time it's Podzinger, an application meant to make it possible for people to search podcasts for specific words and phrases, using a commercial version of speech-recognition technology it developed to potentially help intelligence agencies monitor terrorist chatter.



ANTIQUES STORE

Consignment Galleries

363 Highland Ave., Somerville, 617-629-4900

For anyone with a "You break it you buy it" phobia of antiques shops, this Somerville gem is refreshingly uncluttered and navigable—two words that don't usually apply to antiques stores. But while your elbows won't knock those delicate teacups, your knees might knock as you peruse the artfully arranged array. Its move from Cambridge three years ago means better parking, a larger space and a cozier vibe. The outgoing staff is happy to tell the stories behind such precious merchandise as Persian rugs, old Scottish cherry chests or a sterling tea set from the 1920s. Stop by for a nostalgic afternoon and go home with discovered treasure.

ART SUPPLIES

Started in Boston in 1982 and expanded to Providence in 1985, IYE wisely chose locations near the college students who discover, create and popularize new music and musical tastes before they go mainstream. (One store is near Harvard, while the other is right on the Green Line near BU.) To counterbalance all the Top 10 pablum you hear on the airwaves, they've got the latest in offbeat, underground, undiscovered or underappreciated artists, and in addition to CDs, LPs and 45s, they also sell eight-tracks, DVDs, videos, turntables and movie posters. But our main reason for citing them: IYE sells the kind of older and indie music you just won't find at gigantic chain stores. Anyone with esoteric, nonconformist and adventurous musical tastes will find something to delight in.

hard not to stop and dream about what that plush, amazing chair or those dark and lean end tables uld do for your living room when you pass by Mitchell Gold's windows in the Back Bay. The company's losophy is "Relaxed Design," and it offers a no-pressure, less-intimidating shopping experience with its ll-edited selection of stylish, but not cheap or trendy, furniture. The new Dr. Pitt collection, for exam-, consists of seven pieces of slip-covered furniture that can be pushed together or placed separately, apting to different purposes in different spaces. Typical of the store's style, the lines are clean, and every-ng's comfortable and available in a variety of fabrics, colors and patterns. With an emphasis on customer e (for example, it recently introduced an in-home design service), Mitchell Gold is the place for reason-y priced furniture that'll add oomph to your living space.

CATERING

Max Ultimate Food

www.maxultimatefood.com

When the city's socialites throw a party, this is the company they call for creative, delicious food. Max's genius lies in adapting its style to your needs. If you're having a traditional black-tie wedding, everything will be elegant and comme il faut. If it's a more informal gathering, Max'll do mac 'n' cheese, hot dogs, subs or Chinese food. Known for its high-low sensibility and hyper-creative presentations (like a martini bar where the drinks are matched to jellybeans or a dessert tray of Ring Dings and Twinkies), it puts the fun back in function and adds a dash of wow to any party.

Eastern Boarder

In-the-know boarders, bikers and skaters turn to Eastern Boarder for the best gear and clothing (Rome and Burton snowboards, Zoo York and Girl skateboards, Matix and LRG clothing and DC Shoes) this side of the Rockies. Regulars know they can expect expert advice (many employees are competitive riders themselves), top-quality brands, reasonable prices and top-notch service. They have locations around Massachusetts and southern New Hampshire, and occasional tent sales with killer prices. Eastern will teach you to walk the walk and talk the talk, and you'll be defying gravity Tony Hawk–style before you know it.

DRY CLEANER

Holly Cleaners

1314 Centre St., Newton, 617-527-0770; additional locations in Needham and Wellesley
www.hollycleaners.com

City-dwellers would certainly never haul dirty laundry out to the 'burbs for a cleaning; we tend to patronize whatever's closest to our office or apartment, even if it loses or damages our clothes on a regular basis. But suburbanites immersed in the car culture can be choosier. And the choice for many in the well-heeled hinterlands is Holly Cleaners—a dry cleaner that's been reliably pressing, steaming, washing and folding since 1956. Customers appreciate Holly's ability to remove the toughest spots, their prescheduled pick-up and delivery options, and HollyCraft service that treats delicates with extra-tender care.

ENTERTAINMENT STORE

Cambridge SoundWorks

CambridgeSide Galleria, 617-225-3900; additional locations in Boston, Braintree, Needham, Newton and elsewhere www.cambridgesoundworks.com

What started out as a tiny manufacturer of speakers has now become a mecca for gadget freaks and tech-savvy stereo buffs, selling everything from those award-winning speakers and custom-fitted sound systems to 36"x24" flat-panel LCD TVs. Nationally recognized for quality and service, Cambridge SoundWorks is a factory-direct retailer, which means big savings for customers. And all of their products are ergonomically designed, well-constructed, great-sounding and great-looking. Their "home solutions" service offers free in-home consultations to help you create the right media room (or corner) for your space and budget. All you and your significant other will have to argue about is who gets the remote.

www.newburycomics.com

Everyone knows the Newbury Comics slogan, "Fo wicked good time," but really, they offer both a good ti and good deals. Ten-dollar CDs pack the place, many them by Boston favorites such as Dane Cook, Ben Tay and the Dropkick Murphys, along with DVDs, co books and gag gifts like Simpsons talking bottle oper and sea monkeys. In addition to hawking their tunes, store is financially generous to local musicians in anot way: Co-owner Mike Dreese gives a good chunk of cha to the Berklee College of Music, where more than a fe the artists whose albums he sells started their careers.

CONCEPT STORE

Bodega

When you walk through the door, it looks like you've entered a typical convenience store selling everything from Jamaican soda pop to bathroom cleaner—but there's a surprise inside. Through a hidden door (we're not gonna help you figure out where it is) lies a sleek space with high ceilings, bamboo floors and custom-made rosewood cabinets. Turns out that in addition to Goya beans, Bodega sells cutting-edge urban fashions by independent designers, unusual jewelry and specialty sneakers from lines like Vans Vault and Tier Zero (as well as high-end offerings from more pedestrian brands). The brainchild of Jay Gordon and his partners Oliver Mak (aka DJ Gucci Vuitton) and Dan Natola, it's already generated so much buzz that they almost ran out of stuff to sell in their second week open, and people from all over the world have e-mailed inquiries. Don't worry about being cool enough to shop here; just knowing about this place ups your street cred by a factor of 10.

With more than vendors rotating through the market, it also attracts wds that make for excellent people watching. From ed goods to jewelry and antiques, the merchandise s the gamut, though handbags tend to be a standout. h-end crafts like studio glass, handmade hats and sual textiles round out the offerings. The perfect to while away a summer afternoon, it takes place on Sunday from 10 am–4 pm (this year running through Oct. 29), so there's always free parking. Even better: The vendors change frequently, so you can be assured of variety, since once you make the trip, you'll definitely be back for more.

OUTDOOR STORE

Eastern Mountain Sports

855 Boylston St., Boston, 617-236-1518; additional locations in Boston, Cambridge, Canton, Hingham and elsewhere

www.ems.com

Founded more than 40 years ago in Wellesley by rock climbers who needed specialized equipment, Eastern Mountain Sports has come a long way from ropes and carabiners. Now the home to staple fashion items such as the North Face fleece, they sell everything from trail mix to car racks. The company evaluates its products at a climbing school in North Conway, N.H., so you can be sure a winter coat from EMS will stand up to even the most miserable day in February. If you're the adventurous type, you can sign up for kayak instruction. Whatever activity you're into, EMS has all the gear you'll ever need.

Stingray Body Art

This bright tattoo parlor in Allston is a little slice of the wild side, with five tattooing and piercing booths and an adjoining space selling an assortment of books, DVDs, CDs, novelty items, and apparel and jewelry by local DIY designers. Customers can personalize their own tattoos or choose from an encyclopedic array of established designs at four computer stations. It's also one of the few places in Boston that offers cosmetic tattooing—permanent makeup for eyes, eyebrows and lips or to correct discolored skin or minimize scars. With all the pozos out there walking around with smudged bumblebees or Asian characters they think mean "Balance" but really mean "Unstable," getting a tattoo is one of those things that's worth doing right, and this is the place to do it.

NEWSSTAND

Out of Town News

Located just outside the Red Line station in Harvard Square, this local institution couldn't be more convenient, but it's the mind-boggling variety of newspapers and magazines that makes it the best newsstand around. Just about every domestic and foreign newspaper or magazine will cheerfully be pointed out by the expert staff. The staggering array of magazines spread within and outside the kiosk makes it a great place to waste time. Fashion junkies for whom Elle and Vogue aren't au courant enough will find magazines (some for as much as $70) we've never heard of, while tourists can find maps, postcards and cheesy souvenirs. Stop by at night, and between all the reading material available and the buskers playing live music in the pit outside you've got more, and better, entertainment than you'll find at most movie theaters.

PET GROOMING

The Broadway Dog Spa

547 East Broadway, Boston, 617-269-1164

Even if your pooch isn't snooty enough to be in the next Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show, you can still give your precious a little puppy pampering. South Boston native Michelle McDonnell has been giving dogs the Newbury Street treatment for more than 22 years, which bodes well for her new hometown venture, the Broadway Dog Spa. McDonnell has dolled up oodles of canines—and garnered kudos from pet-lovers in the know—as her expertise and skill have become known around town. What makes the Broadway experience special? McDonnell uses an arsenal of unique approaches to shaping and styling a dog's fur, which means that by the time she's through with him, Rover will be ready for the runway and the dog run.

SHOE REPAIR

TIES

Neiman Marcus

5 Copley Place, Boston, 617-536-3660, www.neimanmarcus.com

Occupying the same amount of space as an entire menswear shop, Neiman's necktie selection stretches across counter after counter—miles of ties, it seems, in a colorful forest of designer names: Armani, Zegna, Ferragamo, Hermes, Brioni, Faberge, Ike Behar. Whether you're the type who grudgingly remembers that the Harvard Club dining room won't let you in without one of these things wrapped around your neck or the kind of peacock who wears one once and then tosses it aside, this is the place for cravats. There are stripes and dots, horses and turtles, paisleys, plaids and florals, in smooth or textured silks, and when they hold their tie sales, the best-dressed men in Boston descend on this place like a pack of jackals.

WELCOME ADDITION

Valentino Boutique

[illegible] St., Boston, 617-[illegible]
www.valentino.com

Just in the nick of time, when Newbury Street was starting to look like an outdoor suburban mall, Milan's godfather of fashion has turned what was a mediocre Italian restaurant into a flagship boutique selling some of the most beautiful, feminine designer clothing in the world. No one makes more gorgeous dresses than Valentino Garavani, who's been dressing Mr. Blackwell's winners since the days when they were Truman Capote's swans. You'll find his prêt-à-porter here, along with ready-to-wear women's accessories, watches, handbags, scarves, fragrances, sunglasses and shoes. But if you're keen on haute couture, a sales associate can take your order and have it sent from Europe in two shakes of a lamb's tail. Further proof that Boston's getting less provincial by the minute.

MEN'S DRESS SHIRTS

Louis Boston

234 Berkeley St., Boston. 617-262-6100. www.louisboston.com

Some men prefer custom shirts from places like Charvet. Others have them made in Hong Kong. If you can't be bothered to schlep all the way to Paris or the Pacific Rim for a shirt, this is the next best thing. Designers like Luciano Barbera, Brioni, Truzzi, and Massimo Bizzocchi make the very best in ready-to-wear shirts from the finest materials, in delicate plaids or tiny stripes with handmade detailing that ensure you won't look like every other drone in the office. So what if the prices are somewhat stratospheric? A good shirt can last a lifetime, and if clothes make the man, wouldn't you rather be made by an Italian tailor than a Korean sweatshop?

conservative burg for the past 30 years by visionary founder Riccardo Dallai. He's got the popular Jaded by Knight line of jackets in embroidered leather and cotton, and lots of Meatpacking District/Lincoln Drive/Melrose kinds of clothes—leather and cotton hoodies with skull-and-crossbone appliqués by the Great China Wall, printed silkscreen overdyed jackets with leather overlays, old concert T-shirts from bands like the Rolling Stones embellished with crystals, or recycled old Army T-shirts with eagles hand-stitched in cashmere. Then there are the chunky Chrome Hearts rings, crosses, stars of David and the supertrendy little dagger symbol that was designed by three L.A. biker buddies and has been spotted on the likes of Tom Brady and Cher (and here we thought we'd never get to print those names together). Sizzling hot fashion, all of it, served in a superhip, laidback environment.

MEN'S MODERATE CLOTHING

Diesel Boston

It's a veritable blue-jean heaven for those addicts who need to come in each season for the newest wash or cut or pocket. All the washes are hand-done, the pockets are set in new places, and there's always some cool detail like two-toned pockets, a slightly yellow wash, the colors of the Italian flag subtly embroidered on the back of the waistband or something new on the fly. Right now, the trendiest looks are the Zathan, a boot-cut with a nice relaxed fit, and the Shagor, a raw denim almost like the original Levi's color before washes became fashionable. Of course, Diesel carries more than just denim: striped jackets distressed until they're soft as a lamb's ear, cargo pants with buttons that look antique, Japanese street punk prints, and ultimate sneakers such as the all-leather white patent and dull white leather Style Lab (a miracle of engineering from Spain). Why should your play clothes be any less serious than your work wardrobe?

MEN'S SHOES

Alan Bilzerian

34 Newbury St., Boston. 617-536-1001; 1217 Centre St., Newton. 617-630-9988; www.alanbilzerian.com

Now that every other fashion shoe store has copped Bilzerian's penchant for wild and crazy sneakers, Boston's retailing leader of the pack has moved on to handmade leather works of art from Perugia-based Carpe Diem; zebra-striped printed horsehide slippers that become clogs if you fold down the back edge; black leather slingbacks—yes, slingb men—made by Muñoz Vrandecic of Spain, stren from heel to sole with a rod made from an antiq spoon; and a Nike sneaker-on-sneaker of white rub holes all over to show the black aqua sock underneat by product designer Marc Newsom. A supercomfy leather shoe made in Italy by Bruno Bordese is so you won't find at the mall—ever. Cutting-edge ow Bilzerian hasn't completely renounced his sneake though: You can still find classic, old-school Chuck as well as canvas shoes with a skull and crossbone front. Forget never judging a man until you've walk in his shoes. If his are from Bilzerian, he's cool.

Sure, they're known for their kicky clothes and shoes, but lately this place has looked like Bangle City. Colored sequin arm candy, multistone-and-gold bangles that look as though they came from Rajasthan, wood bangles wrapped in colored yarn, lace or a python-like skin — the choices are mesmerizing. We're partial to hoop earrings, and they've got all sizes, some as big as your entire ear, in colors including neon orange, baby blue and white-polka-dot. Little drop earrings look like tiny tennis racquets. Others resemble the famous Paloma Picasso loops over loops, in silver or gold (of course they're not real; how could they be at $14?). It's all fun jewelry, and at $5 for some bracelets (or $24 for the tennis racquets), these baubles are for your latest outfit, not your safety deposit box.

Remember those Monday-through-Friday cotton panties you used to wear in grade school? Forget 'em; these undies are for Saturday night… late, and preferably in Paris. We're talking hand-made bra, panties, chemise and robe in papaya yellow sheer silk, or a lace bikini in orange sherbet. A bikini that's nothing but heavy, twisted, brown French-lace openwork, cleverly crocheted tighter over strategic areas, is enough to make all the old guys by the pool vapor-lock. Lots of underwire bras come in delicate florals, mixing surprising color combinations such as yellow and caramel, and other sheer fabrics so delicate they're like butterfly wings. Constructed in Bologna (where men clearly still believe that God created woman), La Perla's lingerie is sexy without being trashy and flawlessly constructed of exquisite materials. In Boston, it's this venerable family-owned master of bouquets, table arrangements and boutonnieres. David Winston and his staff keep opening new branches on this beautiful tree, and they make sure they keep up-to-date on the newest trends in bridal flowers for the wedding party, church and reception tables. FYI: All the rage lately is monochromatic, simple and minimalist, with fewer traditional roses and more dramatic blossoms like orchids and brilliantly colored posies. Give Winston's crack staff your preferences, your dates and your budget, and you can forget about the flowers until you see the breathtaking results on your big day. WEDDING CAKES

Konditor Meister

32 Wood Road, Braintree, 781-849-1970
www.konditormeister.com

You can have your 15-foot-high tower of butter cream piled with real roses and sugared wedding bells, waterfalls and electric lights, but if the wedding cake doesn't taste good, who really cares? Konditor Meister, using the secret traditions of German pastry chefs, can create the towers and flowers with the best of them, but underneath the beautiful exteriors are the most exquisite flavors you've ever tasted in any kind of cake. Guenther Moesinger apprenticed as a teenager to a local baker (or "meister") in his hometown near the Black Forest. After receiving his own master's in confections in 1985, he was snapped up by Ritz Carlton. While there, he met his future wife, Rebecca, and a year later they went into business on their own. The rest is history, as over the last 20 years the duo have won countless awards, including being chosen to bake the cake for the Today Show wedding in 2002. Their signature cake is a strawberry Grand Marnier with chocolate-covered strawberries, but they can do anything. Instead of choking back a polite bite, your guests will be clamoring for seconds.

eternity. Others have experts who know china patterns like the back of their hands, or specialize in fine furniture, rugs and bedding. Bloomingdale's has all this and more, in one convenient location, with a computerized registry that keeps track of everything and remains constantly up-to-date. We've purchased suitcases on a registry list for a couple's honeymoon and a beautiful Ralph Lauren duvet for another pair of newlyweds, helping to ensure that their bedding and towels matched. The only thing it doesn't carry is fine art, but Emily Post advises against art as a wedding gift anyway, since one man's masterpiece is another's velvet Elvis painting.

Besides, the stores are completely computerized so that the usher in Braintree knows what the usher in Brookline is ordering and will turn up with the same look, which lately seems to be matching the colored vest and tie with the bridesmaids' dresses; how else can you stand out when you're wearing basic black? All of the designer tuxes are here, including Ralph Lauren, Perry Ellis and Tommy Hilfiger, and in every size, right down to the ring-bearer's outfit. They'll alter what needs to be altered for the big occasion and—depending on the designer, style and weight of the wool—will rent you a good-looking tux for $49 to $149.

COSMETICS COUNTER

Barneys New York

Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-385-3300

For those who remember the slightly dingy warren of movie theaters that used to inhabit this corner of the Copley Mall, the gleaming white staircase that greets you upon arrival at the new Barneys is a vast aesthetic improvement. The makeup counters are arranged around the staircase on the first floor, benefiting from the natural light that comes through the enormous skylight on the second floor. There are even a couple of Barcelona chairs for lounging. With more curves than straight lines, it's not your usual maze of a cosmetics department. The staff are approachable and generous with their time and patience, and the well-selected inventory includes 20 cosmetic and skincare lines, five men's treatment lines and 25 fragrances. Of these, 13 lines are sold exclusively at Barneys in Boston, including Odile Lecoin and Dr. Sebagh. This is also the place to come if you're searching for a unique signature scent; try customizing your own by layering the eaux de parfum from Serge Lutens. Chasing beauty has never been this fun.

CURLY HAIR SPECIALISTS

Carriage House Salon & Spa

33 Church St., Cambridge, 617-868-7800

www.carriagehousesalon.com

For all those frizzy-haired women who thought a great cut was just for those lucky gals with manageable locks, there's hope in Harvard Square. Owned by curly-haired sisters Janet Cahaly and Christine Williamson, the Carriage House Salon specializes in curly hair. All nine of the stylists are trained in a haircutting technique inspired by Christo's Curlisto and his line of products. (Now a prominent hair stylist in New York, Christo began his career with curly-hair guru Ouidad.) For a defined, frizz-free look, plan to invest some time at the airy, second-floor space. It's not exactly a hardship, as the recently renovated salon overlooks the tree-shaded, historic Old Burying Ground, which imparts a peaceful atmosphere. An initial haircut will take an hour and 15 minutes, comprising the cut, an elaborate drying process and a detailed lesson on how to style your hair to stave off frizz in all weathers. When you see the wonders that Curlisto products, also sold here, work on your heretofore untameable locks, you won't be able to resist buying up a bagful of them.

DAY SPA

Emerge by Giuliano

www.emergespasalon.com

Opened in April by the people who brought you Giuliano's Day Spa (now G2O), it's the only spa on Newbury Street that occupies an entire 19th-century townhouse (and an elegant one at that). The first impression is London's gentleman's club goes zen, with uncluttered, clean spaces paneled in wood. It gets even more zen as you venture upstairs. There's a clubby suite devoted solely to pampering the male of the species, with a dressing room, steam room, sauna, lounge and a barber who offers a hot lather shave. While much has been made of Emerge's caviar pedis, it's not all about ultra-decadent services here. The spa also excels at basic pampering: soothing massages, simple manicures and rejuvenating facials. It's also the ultimate couples' retreat, with a private VIP area that can be rented out and includes a double massage room, a shower big enough for two and a locked door that prevents anyone but authorized staff members from entering. With the juice bar and sitting area on the top floor and a roof deck outside, you'll feel like moving in.

Mitch DeRosa at Mitchell John Salon

67 Broad St., Boston, 617-951-0122, www.mjsalon.com

If you think a blowout is a simple matter of turning frizzy or curly hair stick-straight, think again. DeRosa approaches a blowout with scientific zeal, creating such amazing structure and volume in limp, fine hair that we can only toss our heads in delighted awe. This level of skill comes with experience: A stalwart of the Financial District, DeRosa's operated his salon there for the past 18 years and has also done his fair share of runway and editorial work. He prides himself on blowouts that last for four to five days with just a little touch-up here and there, and with such lasting results, you may quickly become an addict. His detailed explanations of what he's doing may even leave you with the pleasing illusion that you can re-create his magic at home. If only that were true.

Let's face it. You can read all the magazines and try all the makeup tips you want, but you're never going to match the skill of someone who applies cosmetics to faces all day, every day. For your next special occasion, do what the celebrities do and have a makeup artist come to your house to help you get glammed up. When she's not preparing models for photo shoots or fashion shows, Quagenti's available to beautify you for the quite reasonable price of $75 ($125 for brides). With a tool belt of brushes slung around her waist and a huge black case of MAC products, Quagenti will set up her leopard-print makeup chair and get to work. She can produce a glamorous evening look that won't budge, even eight hours later. It's enough to make you wonder where your own camera crew is.

Donna Charloff at Beaucage Salon

71 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-7171, www.beaucage.com

A previous winner in this category, Charloff has 13 years of experience and a window seat at Beaucage overlooking Newbury Street. With her curtain of blonde hair, you might mistake her for a lady of leisure having a spa day, but the unvarnished nails give her away. Why risk ruining a perfectly good manicure with a stray splash of nail polish remover? Her loyal cadre of regulars comes not only for her skill with nails, but also for her charming conversational manner. Good at drawing out her clients, some of whom use her as a weekly therapist to get everything off their chests, she's an interested, concerned listener. Of course, the precision application of nail polish and beautiful shaping are her stock-in-trade, and at these no one can touch her.

Truth be told, we're a little reluctant to share the secret. Dodd uses a combination of Swedish and deep-tissue massage techniques on a clientele that includes some of the hardest bodies in Boston. He's under contract to Boston Ballet (located across the street) to work with the dancers, and a lot of theater people passing through town manage to hear about him as well. Dodd shares a suite with a couple of other massage therapists under the umbrella moniker BodyWorkers of Boston. Once you've paid a visit to this muscular ex-chef, you might discover new muscles you never knew you had. There are no oils, no lotions, no wraps. color to your satisfaction. The treatment includes an incredible massage augmented by techniques she picked up during her travels in Thailand. She also has a light touch with the shaving and filing of calluses. The hour-long process involves three different applications: a tingling, minty scrub (cinnamon in the winter), followed by a mud wrap and then a paraffin wrap. Then your feet should be insured by Lloyd's of London.

ROCK STAR HAIR

Shag

840 Summer St., Boston, 617-268-2500

www.shagboston.com

Anyone who thinks Boston is boring has never been to Shag. The brainchild of Sandy Poirier, a veteran of Newbury Street who sports a styling braided goatee and tattoos that would turn Angelina Jolie's head, Shag is the anti–Newbury Street salon. The open, loft-style space inhabits an old warehouse building a stone's throw from the Seaport District in South Boston (meaning free parking). In the two years it's been open, Shag has attracted everyone from emo punks to one of the wealthiest magnates in Boston and has been featured on MTV's Cinderella reality show, Made. You could go for the free wine and the cool atmosphere, or better yet, for a seriously good haircut, edgy or not. But don't worry, the stylists won't scorn you even if you show up in khakis and a polo shirt.

SUNLESS TANNING

Perfect Tan

1030 Comm. Ave., Boston

617-713-0598

www.perfectan.com

The buzz among tanning aficionados is all about the Mystic Tan system, a fast and easy spraying system providing an even tan that lasts for days—with no harmful exposure to UV rays. You may have heard of it from MTV's Real World or from any one of a number of golden celebrities chatting on a talk show. The surprisingly spacious Perfect Tan, located just beyond BU, offers a private custom-airbrushing booth in addition to all its UV-based tanning beds. With the scent of coconut wafting through the air, the tanning salon features the Multi-Mist System Mystic unit, offering either BronzMyst for an instant tan or ClearMyst, which goes on clear and darkens by the hour. At just $50 for three Mystic Tan sessions, the booth is in high demand, and you'll need to make an appointment.

UPDO

Janet Warner at Salon Marc Harris

www.salonmarcharris.com

Janet Warner is nostalgic for the days when women actually used to visit the hair salon every week to get their hair styled. Haircuts aren't always enough of a challenge for her, which is why she loves doing special-occasion hair. Ask her to help you with a themed costume party, and she'll go all out. She still speaks fondly of a particularly towering '50s-bouffant she created. She can even make a chin-length bob into an updo that could fool a seasoned hair professional into thinking it's constructed from much longer hair. This must be why she's booked practically every Saturday from May to October for wedding duty. With such a resource available, though, there's no reason to save updos for weddings. On top of it all, she's a peach of a person.

MEN'S HAIRCUT

Anthony Pino at Anthony Pino Hair Salon

299 Newbury St., Boston, 617-927-0085, www.anthonypino.net

Anthony Pino is a man's man. He's the sixth of seven kids in a family where the girls are hairdressers and the boys are electricians or carpenters. But the stocky, dark-haired Pino's destiny took a bit of a turn. He went from studying carpentry and playing football at Somerville High School to shampooing heads on Newbury Street at the age of 16, and he's been there ever since. Now he has his own salon a few blocks from Mass. Ave., opened two years ago and built by one of his carpenter cousins. He's a happy guy with plenty of hobbies to balance his career; maybe that's the secret of his haircutting abilities. For good, contemporary men's haircuts that don't scream edgy, Pino's your man.

WAXING

Renée Christopher at debú Salon & Spa

184 South St., Boston, 617-292-3328

www.debuboston.com

Located in the Leather District not from South Station and the Financial trict, the salon is a touch of Miami Be in Boston. Reneé Christopher, the spa rector, has a warm, best-girlfriend man that'll put you at ease even when s wielding hot wax near sensitive areas. genius is doing your 'stash wax or kitty as quickly and painlessly as possi which is why she's a multiyear winne addition to regular and Brazilian bi waxes, she's coined the Bostonian—no bare as the Brazilian, but designed to commodate more flattering and fashi able, high-cut bathing suits. Fifteen utes later, you'll be all set for the beach

WOMEN'S HAIRCUT

Dirk Diegel at James Joseph Sal

www.jamesjosephsalon.com

One of Dirk Diegel's clients flies from Washington, D.C., to see every time she needs a haircut. She's the only one. Diegel, a native of many who's been here for 11 years, has clients making the trip from York, Connecticut and Vermont as as the Boston environs. What's the cret of his appeal? He won't tell you. also doesn't want you to know how he's been cutting hair. And you'll n guess the years of experience from looks, despite the resemblance to a tenuated El Greco saint. He doe think he does anything special, o than satisfy a very picky clientele ra ing in age from 25 to 85 (which actu seems pretty miraculous to us). H collaborator, not a dictator, he says.

WOMEN'S WORKOUT

Healthworks

441 Stuart St., Boston, 617-859-7700

additional locations in Brookline, Cambri Chestnut Hill and Salem

www.healthworksfitness.com

Duh. This all-women's gym has won category repeatedly, and with good son. Besides the fact that it's more c fortable for many women to work o a testosterone-free environment, Hea works has everything you could wis in a gym, co-ed or not. With their selection of classes and well stoc equipment areas, you can get in a good workout eve peak hours. They're attitude-free, efficiently laid-out feature lots of thoughtful little touches, like an exte magazine selection so you're not stuck on the ellip reading a tattered copy of Golf Digest. TVs are o channels, but they also show movies, and there's a appointed nursery where moms can stash their little lings. The male-free aspect also gives you the neces courage to try something new, like intermittently off Cardio Striptease, without worrying that the leche guy from the accounting department will be ogling yo

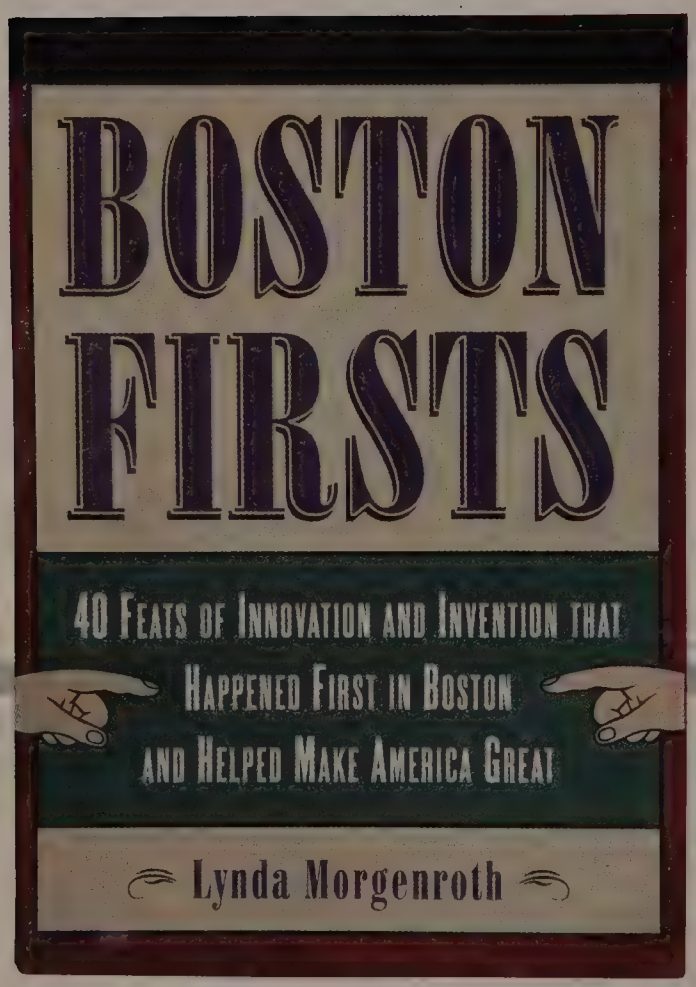
SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



A BIG RÉSUMÉ OF OUR TOWN

Boston Firsts*, by Lynda Morgenroth, details 40 inventions and novel ideas that originated in Boston.

"Each new idea arrives and enters our open port as intriguing cargo," writes Lynda Morgenroth in her fun-to-read book Boston Firsts. In this case, same-sex marriage is the itchy, frisky idea that got historically validated in our state. Forty short chapters take on Hub hallelujahs in the realms of commerce and industry (Baker's chocolate invented 1765, and Filene's Basement founded in 1909), as well as art and architecture, publishing, government and nature. You've used "the harmonic telegraph" today thanks to Alexander Graham Bell's first phone call in 1876. Morgenroth colors this thrilling history with hip, current observations and makes you notice just how vast and varied our accomplishments and inventions are. The famous black 54th Civil War regiment was led by a local white patrician colonel; also patrician was our local goddess of art and culture, Isabella Stewart Gardner with her European-style palace. Heard of ice? In 1833 Boston's William Tudor, through exciting twists and turns, finally shipped over 100 tons of "glistening ice" to India. Mr. Gillette banished stropping by developing the disposable blade. Each story zips with color.

GENERALLY FANTASTIC GENERAL STORE

Aunt Sadie's at 18 Union Park St., South End, sells comforts and joys, gifts, candles and luxurious necessities (617-357-7117).

Aunt Sadie's is a store with enough nutty customer loyalty to have a pajama-party sale at 5:30 am. Located in a beautiful, leafy South End pocket, it's a combination of friendly chicness, color themes, musical nostalgia, itsy baby things, droll little books and humor, including affectionate gay-themed items, like a groom and a groom for the top of the wedding cake. It's all set in prettily painted wooden hutches and nooks that feel country-like. Each niche is saturated with one color; the fresh-fruit orange one displays light, springy 100 percent Italian orange cotton towels, CDs capturing '50s and '60s music (like Bach for the Bath) and some amusing Bag Lady–brand teas. One area is devoted to olives; its whole hors d'oeuvre-arama includes a teeny, two-headed spoon to dig out olives, plates painted with them and big-as-a-pillow squares of bread. A green sleigh displays gardening tools: Sadie's has 44 scents including cherry, blueberry pie and sam, with more than 100 styles of decoration on the containers. There are charmingly imagin infant clothes and toys, and frisky books offering subversive advice on manners. Ella Fitzg croons like lazy honey through the air.

Stayin' Alive

Can we stomach "live-fish sashimi"?

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Thanks for the memories. You can no longer buy live lobsters—or crabs—at Whole Foods Markets, whose management has decided it's inhumane to keep the creatures captive in crowded quarters while they await their ultimate destination: a big pot of boiling water. For sentient creatures like ourselves, it would be a hideous fate, but is Whole Foods flinching as a result of scientific research or culturally biased political correctness?

According to a biology professor friend, Whole Foods' "research" just doesn't hold (boiling) water. "In the grand scheme of things, they're arthropods," he says. "They feel pain like an ant you'd step on or a termite or cockroach you'd squash."

Which made me feel less squeamish about sampling the "live-fish sashimi" (which includes lobster and shrimp) at Fugakyu in Brookline. Chef Hiro San—possibly the only chef in the area who plucks a live fish from a tank and presents it, among orchids and carved vegetables, still gasping and flapping its tail—is reassuring. "They don't feel too much, plus they're FOOD," he says. "My mother told me I could play with my food."

Chef Hiro San serves up live-fish sashimi at Fugakyu in Brookline.

Seriously, though. "It's a tradition, a specialty item," he explains as he deftly fillets the black bass with a knife, dabs it carefully with a white towel, and serves firm ribbons of flesh, sprinkled with tobiko atop the sporadically active fish. Although it's filleted, the internal organs are intact. Hiro chuckles. "He doesn't know he's undressed right now," he says, glancing at the wriggly fish. "Little does he know he's buck naked."

Sitting at the sushi counter, diners have a partly obstructed view of the preparation process, which Hiro says is intentional. "I don't want to upset anybody," he says. "We want to let people enjoy these traditional items outside Japan." Most of the requests for live-fish sashimi come from Asians, or people who've traveled to Asia and are comfortable with a specialty that is "not shocking in Japan," he says.

Following the fish course—which is quisitely delicate and delicious—is an cellent bowl of black bass soup with ger and scallion, made from the head bones of the fish. Lobster miso soup is served with the live spiny lobster sash The sweet shrimp are, indeed, sweet tender, and the tempura-fried shr heads are delectably crunchy. A li squeamishness kicks in as I go eye to with the shrimp, so I poke out the eyes fore eating the heads. Hiro is amu "The French and the Americans don't the eyes, but the Japanese eat the ey he says.

Live-fish sashimi isn't everybody's of tea. When less-than-fully-inform diners order the item, Hiro makes it c that dinner will be a literally moving perience. "We don't want them to it!" he chuckles.

Hiro enjoys this particular line work—"it's the coolest thing for me and wishes more people would try When he dines out, however, "I'm a steak guy," he says, adding, "I like it m ing." As for my friend the biology pro sor, well, he's a vegetarian. IB

CityScope and Music: Give It Up for Gammons

On July 12, the annual concert Hot Stove, Cool Music: The Fenway Park Sessions—cosponsored by THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN—gives us all a chance to support Foundation To Be Named Later, a charity founded by Sox GM Theo Epstein and his brother Paul, to raise funds and awareness for local nonprofits. But it's also our first opportunity to give one huge, collective shout-out to Peter Gammons—one of the event's founders and the unofficial commissioner of major league baseball, who was stricken by a brain aneurysm on June 27. As he starts his recovery, there's no better way for fans of baseball in general (and of the Red Sox in particular) to show their admiration than by supporting an event that he cares so much about. As always, the Sessions lineup is packed with big-time musicians—most notably, six-time Grammy winner James Taylor, who's joined by the likes of Buffalo Tom, Howie Day, Ayla Brown, the Click Five, Furvis and many more. Between musical acts, Mike O'Malley and other celebrities get the laughs going with some original skits. The gates open at 5 pm. Fenway Park, 4 Yawkey Way, Boston (877-733-7699). www.redsox.com. $50–$100. —RL

Movies: A Flicker at Night

You can't call yourself a true Bostonian until you've laid out on a blanket at the Hat Shell for Free Friday Flicks. Now in its 20th year, the summer event is a favorite am locals. It features family-oriented films on Fridays through Labor Day, rain or shine, it fits everyone's weekend budget. In partnership with WBZ News Radio and CBS4 Boston, the Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation sponsors th evenings, with free giveaways at the CBS tent. The films start at sundown (about 8: pm), but to guarantee the best views and plenty of lounging room for a posse, it's sm to get there early. The films are announced week by week, but there are hints about future showings posted online, which gives you a fighting chance to plan ahead. Ha Shell, Charles River Esplanade, Boston (617-787-7200). www.cbs4boston.com. —LPK

's certainly not out of the ordinary to see Bill Belichick over at Gillette Stadium—the an's basically lived there for the last five years, either in his office or pacing the sidelines. t if you spot the grey hoodie–clad god at the Razor on July 27, he'll be watching the ction from a different perspective: the stands. That's because Belichick's boy Bon Jovi heir friendship goes back to Bill's days with the Giants) is in town. Jon Bon and his gang om the Dirty Jerz obviously need very little introduction. They've released more than 10 lbums, won countless awards and inspired about 10 years' worth of horrible hair styles, ut since they're coming to Boston on what's undoubtedly the tail end of their performing ays, we suggest catching them while you can. while somehow adding a touching, almost tragic dimension that barely exists on the page. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Great New Wonderful ★★

A "9/11 comedy" from the maker of Dude, Where's My Car certainly sounds horrifying on paper, but director Danny Leiner's soul-sick multi-character study is, surprisingly enough, a bit too tame and polite for its own good. Taking place in September of 2002, the film follows a handful of exasperated New Yorkers trying to keep their frazzled nerves in check. The attacks of a year before are never directly mentioned, but hover over every interaction like a menacing cloud. Maggie Gyllenhaal stars as an-up-and-coming cake designer, catering to Manhattan's wealthiest citizens while trying to ignore the spiritual vacuum she feels inside. Like a more muted Magnolia, the film daisy chains around half-a-dozen tangentially related characters, and everything circles back to the same shell-shocked sense of emptiness and unease. Leiner's not trying to tell a story here so much as chronicling a malaise, but The Great New Wonderful lacks a rooting interest and is is at times maddeningly unspecific. (At Kendall Square.)

An Inconvenient Truth ★★★

This sobering, necessary documentary consists mainly of a multimedia presentation given by former vice president Al Gore about our rising carbon dioxide levels and the potentially catastrophic effects of climate change. Introducing himself by saying, "I used to be the next President of the United States," Gore is a good deal looser and funnier than that the robot we remember from the campaign trail. His lecture is dense but accessible, illuminating some tricky meteorological concepts with welcome clarity, and he utilizes some sobering photographs to haunting effect. (But it's not all dour doomsaying—there's even a very funny Futurama cartoon worked into the piece.) Director Davis Guggenheim only stumbles on the occasions when he leaves the stage and gets into Gore's biography. These mercifully brief interludes on his Tennessee farm feel far more suited to a campaign advertisement, detracting from the undeniable urgency of this movie's message. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

The Lake House ★★★

Keanu Reeves and Sandra Bullock re-team for the first time since Speed, playing star-crossed pen pals separated by a gulf of two years. Both happen to reside in the same weird, glass architectural oddity on a lovely Chicago lake, and there's some sort of barely explained to-do about a magical mailbox that's able to transport their correspondence across the sea of time. If you think too hard about the story, your head will probably explode. Best just to sit back and soak in the swoony, postcard-perfect cinematography by Alar Kivilo and the abundant chemistry of these two charming leads. Argentine director Alejandro Agresti smartly shies away from the scenario's obvious implausibility and instead focuses all his energy on sustaining a deliriously melancholy mood. Bullock interestingly plays against her bubbly girl-next-door charms, summoning a real and touching loneliness. And perhaps it has something to do with his vaguely alien bearing, but Reeves tends to shine in these sort of otherworldly projects. Sorry boys, it's a "chick flick" through and through, but also an exceptionally graceful one. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Nacho Libre ★

Napoleon Dynamite director Jared Hess indulges some alarmingly racist tendencies in this slovenly comedy starring Jack Black as a Mexican friar turned wrestler. If you think being poor and brown-skinned is inherently hilarious, then Nacho Libre is sure to provide peals of raucous laughter. Everyone else will be left wondering where the jokes are. As in his overrated cult fetish item Napoleon, Hess cares little for the forward momentum of conventional storytelling, and exhibits even less interest in the inner lives of his characters. The movie is a flat-lined procession of deadpan sketches, rigorously arranged before the camera in static tableaus, and typically ending with a derisive snicker at somebody's physical abnormality. Black gamely crams his portly physique into skin-tight stretch-pants, but he can't seem to hold onto a consistent characterization for more than 10 minutes at a time. Disturbingly enough, the film was co-produced by the children's cable network Nickelodeon. It has an ugly, bullying spirit. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest ★★½

Bogged down by blockbuster elephantitis, this noisy, seemingly endless sequel to the surprise 2003 smash is more exhausting than exhilara Johnny Depp returns as the roguish, strange Captain Jack Sparrow, again swishing and slu and generally stealing any scene that isn't al nailed down. Problem is, everyone who h much as one speaking line in the bloated or has come back for more, and screenwriters Te liot and Terry Rosario are so busy laying th wieldy expository groundwork for a massive, film mythology (the next sequel is already i can, ready for release next summer) that thi takes forever and a day to get rolling. A shar the swashbuckling scenes are delightful Goldberg set pieces, reminiscent of Indiana J funniest dustups. The special effects work i first-rate, with the great character actor Bill N working wonders as squid-faced, undead p Davy Jones. Producer Jerry Bruckheimer and tor Gore Verbinski don't seem to understand sometimes less is more. There's a charming minute entertainment buried somewhere w these two and a half fatiguing hours. (At B Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Prairie Home Companion ★★★½

Eighty-one-year-old maverick Robert Altman a Garrison Keillor's long-running public radio gram into a sweetly comic meditation on los mortality. Within a loose narrative framework ing the show's final broadcast, Altman lets hi ing camera meander and zoom with typical backstage at the Fitzgerald Theater. A Scanner Darkly ★★

Best known for roaming, pleasantly chatty i like Slacker and Before Sunset, writer-dir Richard Linklater takes on legendary scienc tion writer Philip K. Dick's 1977 dystopian addiction parable, using the same interpolat toscoping animation techniques he pioneer his 2001 film Waking Life. For all intents an poses "painting" over previously shot foota his actors, Linklater creates a wavy, shimm aesthetic that here takes surprisingly little a tage of the format's visual possibilities. K Reeves stars as an undercover cop who s drifts into dope-addled dementia while inves ing a gang of innocuous-seeming subu layabouts, played by Robert Downey Jr., W Harrelson and Winona Ryder. Linklater's ch teristically low-key, unobtrusive vibe is a po for Dick's clammy paranoia. Whenever it s be ratcheting up the tension, A Scanner D merely wanders in a daze from one stone counter to another, giving disappointingly shrift to the source material's warnings abo vanishing civil liberties. It's an unexpectedly talky film. (At Kendall Square.)

Superman Returns ★★★½

Boldly emotional and stubbornly old-fashione rector Bryan Singer's heartfelt valentine to th of Steel punches your nostalgia buttons fro get-go, incorporating not only John Williams' iar triumphant theme music, but also select sn of Marlon Brando's 1978 performance as J Newcomer Brandon Routh capably steps Christopher Reeve's blue tights, here return Metropolis after a five-year interstellar hia once again fight for truth, justice and the Am way. Superman comes back to find a changed that has seemingly passed him by, and the m nifty, unspoken subtext actively questions wh our cynical era still has any use for such a forth true-blue hero. Singer's answer is a resoundir and despite some state-of-the-art computer-g ated special effects, the film still feels like the uct of a sweeter, gentler movie-making era. W a trace of postmodern irony, Superman R champions the virtues of nobility, decency and fice. The movie is packed with grandiose, than-life images that sweep you along with iconic forcefulness. It's good to have him bac Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Wordplay ★★★

This genial and unexpectedly suspenseful mentary in part chronicles the 28th A erican Crossword Tournament, but also casts net just a bit wider to address both the history l enduring fascination behind the often mad- ing time-killers. Directed by Patrick Creadon, film pays tribute to the die-hards of the under- und puzzle culture, while also making some- ng of a superstar out of New York Times cross- d editor Will Shortz. Celebrity crossword ionados have come out of the closet, which sts nice problem-solving insights from former sident Clinton, a few inane pseudo-poetic ram- gs from documentary filmmaker Ken Burns, a lot of seriously funny, unhinged commentary n Daily Show host Jon Stewart. Wordplay's best ments follow puzzle designer Mearl Reagle as he lds a crossword from scratch for the camera's efit. Jersey Boys

Sometimes you can't go home again.

BY SEAN BURNS

It's been 12 long years since writer-director Kevin Smith exploded onto the indie scene with his scandalously scatological register-jockey comedy, Clerks. Produced for a pittance, shot in crummy-looking black and white, and taking place almost entirely inside the New Jersey convenience store where Smith toiled behind the counter every day, Clerks was a rugged, do-it-yourself dispatch from all the guys you thought you'd left behind in your hometown—you know, the ones still living with their moms and working the same dead-end jobs they had in high school.

At the time, most upscale art-house audiences weren't yet equipped to handle the crude, gassy humor of overeducated, under-ambitious 20-somethings Dante Hicks (Brian O'Halloran) and Randal Graves (Jeff Anderson), as they endlessly discussed the insignificant minutiae of pornography, Star Wars, and assorted deviant sexual practices. I still fondly recall scads of outraged walkouts during the jaw-dropping necrophiliac climax, and it's worth remembering that Clerks was initially smacked with an NC-17 rating, strictly for its language.

Catching up with the film again recently on cable, I was taken aback by how quaint it suddenly seems. Nothing dates faster than shock value, and our culture has coarsened so immeasurably over the past decade, it's hard to imagine that such a fundamentally sweet movie caused such a fuss. But what holds up best about Clerks is how genuine and grounded in reality it feels. There's a vivid sense that every sprawling conversation and gross-out incident is based on something that happened to Smith during all those long hours spent behind the counter.

Alas, the same cannot be said for Clerks II. Picking up 10 years or so after the original, we discover Dante and Randal are now stranded somewhere in their early 30s, but still working the same dead-end jobs. After a fire lays waste to both the Quick Stop and its neighboring video store, the two improbably wind up flipping burgers at the local Mooby's—a cartoon-cow-themed fast food franchise invented by Smith for his 1999 religious satire, Dogma.

Right away it's hard to swallow that these two guys, accustomed as they are to sitting around doing nothing all day, could hack it for more than a day or two in the comparatively stressful, more demeaning world of fast food. In a far cry from the first film's lived-in depiction of counterculture, here Smith doesn't seem to have done much research into how these places actually run. The restaurant is usually empty, allowing the employees ample time to banter, goof off and even surf the Internet.

It's supposed to be Dante's last day, as he's moving to Florida with his fiancée, Emma (played quite badly by Jennifer Swallenbach Smith, the filmmaker's wife.) She's got a nice life already mapped out for him, and the spineless Mr. Hicks would doubtlessly go along without question, were it not for a certain yearning he feels for Rosario Dawson's sassy Mooby's manager.

Randal is up to his old tricks, picking fights with any Lord of the Rings fan who dares speak ill of his precious Star Wars trilogy, and mustering elaborate strings of profanity that this time around feel more labored than amusing. And as in nearly every Kevin Smith film, our rascally neighborhood dope peddlers Jay and Silent Bob (again played by Jason Mewes and the director himself) are still standing around parking lots bothering people all day, the only difference being that a lengthy rehab stint has taught them the power of prayer, so Jay now enjoys preaching the Gospel in the bluntest terms imaginable.

A strategic retreat to familiar ground for Smith after the critical and commercial drubbing given to his maudlin domestic drama Jersey Girl, Clerks II is a broad and unconvincing affair, marred by distracting celebrity cameos from the likes of Ben Affleck, Jason Lee and Wanda Sykes. Lacking the grubby authenticity of its predecessor, the movie feels clueless and out of touch, constantly straining to top itself with bigger, grosser and more outrageous situations. By the time Randal hires a live donkey sex show from Tijuana, you won't even question how a man and his mule made it from Mexico to Jersey in a scant couple of hours—you'll just be wondering why it isn't funnier.

Kevin Smith finds himself at a tricky career crossroads right now. For all its rampant toilet talk, Clerks II is also chock-full of the same touchy-feely family values speeches that characterized Jersey Girl. It becomes painfully clear over the course of the film, particularly during the mawkish final reels, that Smith's not especially interested anymore in Star Wars chatter and dirty jokes. You come away thinking that maybe the healthiest thing this once-promising talent can do next is put Jay and Silent Bob to rest once and for all, and then get the heck out of Jersey. IB

Breaking News

Editors play hard against post-punk type and hype.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

New post-punk bands from England are blowing up large. The Arctic Monkeys are packing larger halls behind a debut that New Music Express ranked within the five greatest British albums ever, ahead of Revolver and London Calling. And Bloc Party, which released its own hot 2005 debut, is poised to headline the 5,000-seat Bank of America Pavilion July 28.

That same weekend, however, Editors fly under the radar into the more modest-sized Paradise for the Birmingham quartet's third Boston visit this year, despite a brooding, anthemic debut that stands tall alongside those other CDs.

"We're just going to keep it growing and build a fan base from the bottom," says bassist Russell Leetch, "not get too hype-driven about success."

Not that Editors lack hype at home. The five-year-old group has piled up press clippings that trumpet its frenetic live shows and the dark, euphoric appeal of The Back Room, which has reportedly earned praise from the likes of Elton John and even Michael Jackson, an acquaintance of a friend's.

"One of the first times that I had nightmares was after I watched the 'Thriller' video," the 24-year-old bassist says of that 1983 horror minifilm. "He's a pop icon, so it's strange."

"In the U.K., things go quite fast, but it was a long build," says Leetch, who shared substandard housing and utilitarian day jobs with singer-guitarist Tom Smith, guitarist Chris Urbanowicz and drummer Ed Lay while they incubated songs for The Back Room.

"We shared a house for three years and I lived in the lounge for a year, which wasn't the best," he says from the sidewalk outside a Birmingham pub before a World Cup match. "Myself and Tom worked in a call center, which is like the modern-day equivalent to manufacturers. It's monotonous."

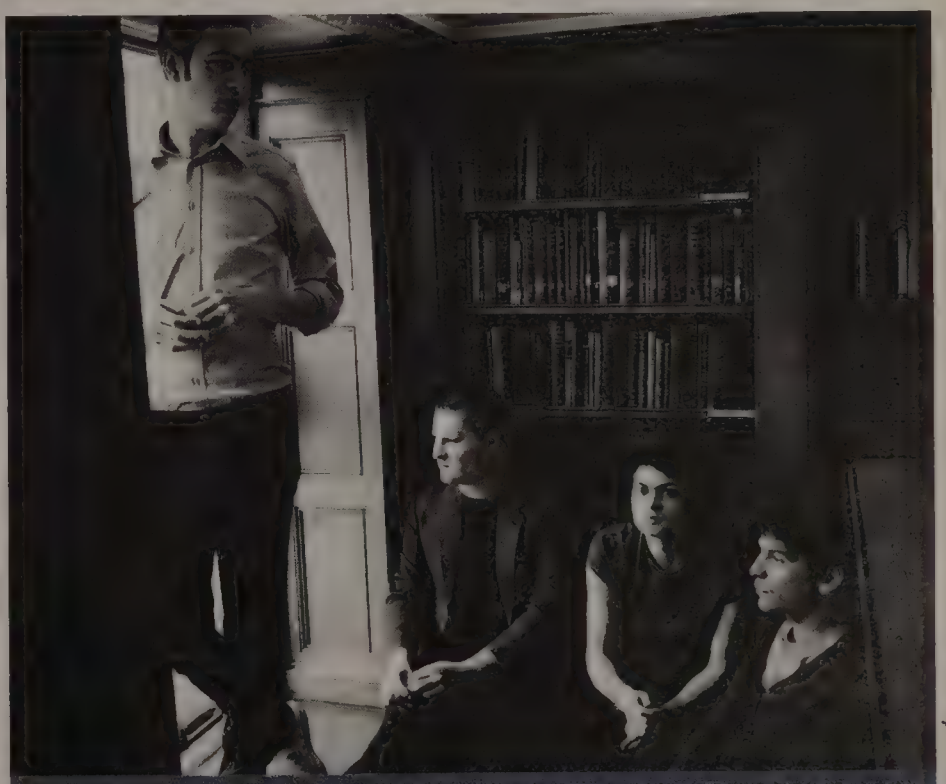
The four members met while taking a music technology course at Staffordshire University. "It was holding off that job that we thought we'd have to get, and we took that kind of course because we would meet like-minded people," Leetch says. "As soon as we were finished, we moved to Birmingham and thought we'd have a crack at it to get a record deal."

They signed with indie label Kitchenware, but only after changing the band's name from Snowfield to avoid confusion with Snow Patrol. "If people dis our name as Editors," he says, "we at least know that it's better than Snowfield."

"It was an organic development, but the songs were always there," says Leetch. "'Bullets' is one of our earliest songs. That was the point where we all thought this is as good as anything that's out there. This is what we believed people should listen to. We bonded over bands that we loved like the Strokes, Elbow, Spiritualized and Radiohead, and just did our thing."

Other bands get mentioned more often in the press when it comes to comparisons. At first blush, largely because of Smith's resonant baritone, Editors sound like an Interpol knockoff, sharing in the gloomy influence of Joy Division. Then there's a sonic element that recalls early U2 or Echo & the Bunnymen, particularly in the reverb-tinged guitar shards of Urbanowicz. But a deeper listen to The Back Room reveals more passion than posturing, as Editors convey an edgy momentum and musicality that leaves its own stamp.

"It would be pointless for us to mimic another band," Leetch says. "It's something that's very coincidental. We didn't grow up listening to [those '80s groups]. We're 24 and 25. The band that I could see the most, I suppose, is Echo & the Bunnymen. They kinda click when you see what they're doing. But we hadn't heard them until someone from our record label gave us the records and said 'This is one of my favorite bands, and you remind me of them.'"



Hailing from Birmingham, England, the Editors make a stop in Boston for the third time this year.

Urbanowicz's bold, painterly style indeed evokes Bunnymen guitarist Will Sergeant as well as the Edge, giving Leetch and Lay room to fill space with their pithy, active drive.

"It might sound strange, but Chris doesn't like guitars," Leetch says. "He likes to make them sound more like synths or a percussive instrument than straight-out guitar lines."

"We're very rhythmic," Leetch adds. "We like to do things that excite us. With the first record, it was quite fast-paced in lots of places, but we felt that the urgency needed to be there."

That urgency helps diffuse the glumness with optimism, though the CD was clearly affected by the dark environment that spawned it. "[The next disc] will focus on different things," Leetch says, "not facing the monotony of not knowing what you're doing, and struggling."

And in the meantime, Editors keep fanning the fire on tour. "We try to put as much energy as we can into our show," he says. "We don't want to be just an average live band. We've got ambitions to be a great, great live band." iB

CANCER JUNE 21–JULY 22

The upside to having Mercury retrograde in your sign becomes evident when the Messenger merges with the Cancer sun on July 18. This affirmation of all things Crab, particularly the ancient wisdom that is a benchmark of your sign, should see you through the rest of the year. Before the night is over, you may notice that the folks checking you out are increasingly responsive to the vibes you're sending. Could it be because magnetic Venus has entered your sign, making you an irresistible object of desire until Aug. 12?

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

A surge of power develops—not to be confused with an ego trip—as energetic Mars in your sign aligns with intense Pluto on July 14. Make the most of whatever advantage you gain, since it'll be another two years before you're in this enviable position again. The fact that power-hungry Pluto is dominating your Sagittarius house of fun and games could indicate the best places to strut your stuff. But if the playground doesn't hold your interest, perhaps taking a risk in the stock market will. Mars leaves for Virgo on July 22, so don't dally.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

The pressure you're currently feeling could be a lot more intriguing than your customary dread of deadlines. That's because affable Venus in your Gemini mid-heaven is ever so persuasively calling the shots. If a conflict emerges between an intractable family situation and your next career move, it could be resolved by an unconventional idea from your spouse, business partner or, in some cases, your attorney or agent. Be sure to pay attention to what you learn when your Mercury ruler meets the life-sustaining sun on July18.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Doing your best to please your employer or parents will continue to be important for about another month. However, before your nose goes back to the grindstone, take time to enjoy the spiritual and musical highs offered while your artistic Venus ruler and impressionable Neptune align. Venus also puts you in the uncommon position of getting down and dirty with a Scorpio or a Sagittarius or both. Remember: When affectionate Venus is in the sign of the Twins, choosing one appealing candidate over another is no easy task.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

A semirare occasion when both Mars and Pluto, your co-ruling planets, engage in a rewarding trine occurs on July 14. So no matter what actually happens at that time, consider it a positive result of the challenge you rose to when they weren't on such good terms (around tax time in April). And since Pluto is ensconced in your visionary Sagittarius money house and Mars is in your creative Leo mid-heaven, it's probably safe to assume that both your income and your reputation are about to expand. Fingers crossed?

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Unlike your Scorpio neighbor, you might not reap financial rewards from the supportive trine from Mars to Pluto in your sign; nonetheless, the mixture of physical energy and psychological determination they provide can be the shot needed to get a personal goal up and running. Even though Mercury is retrograde, now would be a good time to have a little adventure. By foot or in your head makes little difference. The blast of fire power coming from Mars' bi-annual trip through heartfelt Leo won't last long, so don't blow it.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

The good, the let's hope not-so-bad and the beautiful. Good is being able to fully enjoy the warmth and light coming from the sun in your Cancer marriage house. The not-so-bad might be anticipating what information Mercury digs up while it's retrograde in the sign of the Crab. And the beautiful are the people who show up once magnetic Ve enters Cancer on July 18. That could well be the red-let day of the summer for the entire range of Goats—fro Christmas kids to the almost Aquarians. The Capricorn moon on July 10 is also pretty special.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

During the regretfully few weeks that Venus flits through house of romance and recreation, you'd be wise to drop aloof attitude and get into the game. Since love is hard t under the best of circumstances, a fleeting summer roma is surely better than nothing. If you're already firmly attached, you could use this brief interlude to sweet talk sweetheart and have fun fooling around with friends. So enough you'll get the call to return to duty and fulfill th promises you made before Mercury went retrograde.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

It might get a little messy, but would you want to miss drama taking place when affable Venus opposes passio Pluto at the top of your chart on July 14? Some Fish m get caught in the middle of a public confrontation, whi elusive February-born may be able to swim under the r Or is it sonar? Mercury returning to your Cancer house romance suggests an ex- is on the way. If not the perso the flesh, then around July 18, news you'll want to kno about. Come July 22, rough-and-ready Mars enters you Virgo marriage house. Put up your dukes!

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

It can't be helped; like Prince Charming's kiss, summer reawakens relationships that have lain dormant since Christmas. While the sun travels through the "womb t tomb" area of your chart—plus, this year retrograde Mercury digs up childhood memories—it'll be hard be more involved with the relatives. Luckily for the athletically inclined and entertainment-oriented, your ruler, by cavorting through the zone that governs recre romance and risk, offers permission to get out of the h and amuse yourself elsewhere.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

If variety truly is the spice of life, you're in for one tasty While it transits mobile Gemini, your Venus ruler can transport you to an aesthetic high when she aligns with artistic Neptune; a week later, you could be wallowing i Pluto's pits of passion. After Venus enters Cancer on July one favorable experience follows another. It starts with trine to gift-giving Jupiter in your Scorpio house of parti and ends by hooking you up with unconventional Uranu your house of friends and colleagues as the month ends.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

As long as your Mercury ruler is retrograde in your Canc money house, avoid making any financial decisions bigg than a breadbox. By all means do the research, but no computer, no car until Mercury goes direct on July 28. If want to play it really safe, no major transactions until A after Mercury is back in Leo. However, with magnetic Ver Gemini until July 18, there'll be plenty of diversions avai for your enjoyment. Along with the visual and musical hi you're due for an intense encounter with sexy Pluto in yo house of partners.

Nantucket Pirate (named): I can't believe I'm doing this, but I've thought about you more than once—so here goes. I met you on June 17 at the Chicken Box on Nantucket. You were at a bachelor party dressed as a pirate (the skipper to be exact), complete with chicken legs, brown eyes, a red head scarf and a matching brother. I had long, black hair and was wearing an emerald-green, strapless shirt (my name is Christine). I tried to give you my phone number but didn't have a pen. You said something to me as I left that I couldn't make out. If you ever read this and want to have a drink, please feel free to get in touch.

Serving up Stereotypes

To all of the servers in Boston: When there's a couple at your table, please acknowledge both people. Who is to say that the guy is always going to get the check? Altering your service so that you can get a bigger tip is assumed, but be careful who you focus on. Why can't you just leave the check in the middle of the table? One would hope that we've moved beyond the chauvinist assumption that the guy always pays. I understand that most of the time this behavior is unintentional, but come on—break the cycle!
—Female Bread Winner

Girls Just Want To Have Fun

To the guy at Embassy: You're the reason I never go to clubs. My girlfriends and I were dancing in a circle off to the side of the dance floor. We were innocently shaking what our mommas gave us, singing along to Kelly Clarkson's "Walk Away" and generally enjoying a girls' night out. Seeing as we made up the majority of the heterosexual female population that night, you homed in on us. You came up behind my friend, and she indulged you for a bit, then gave us a sign and we helped her escape. But you wouldn't be deterred. You made your way around the circle and snuck up behind me. I moved away, but being the persistent pest you are, you followed. I moved again and you stayed a few steps behind, remaining there for a good portion of the night, bouncing awkwardly to the music and staring hungrily at our circle. Maybe if you'd asked before you grabbed us from behind, you would have had a chance. You could also try being less creepy in general. Thanks a bunch.
—In Hiding

Legally Served

Divine islanders: Although I couldn't gush enough about how much I love you all, I really want to thank you for making my birthday so special. All your efforts meant so much to me and helped make my 21st birthday the best I can remember!

Calamari Crush

Hi, Dr. Emily. I was sitting at the Franklin Café bar late at night with some friends. You came in with a group of six or seven people—one of whom was celebrating a birthday (your brother, I think?). You leaned on the bar next to me and I invited you to try my calamari. Before you had a chance to politely decline, I scooped up a forkful and slid it between the teeth of your beautiful smile. You agreed it was delicious. While you entertained your friends and I entertained my appetite, we chatted a little bit, (you're a doc, live in J.P., 28), and I wished your brother a happy birthday. I saved my last bite of calamari and insisted that you eat it. You did, and you seemed to enjoy it even more than the first. You had to leave too soon. I'd love to share some drinks and some more late-night last bites with you.

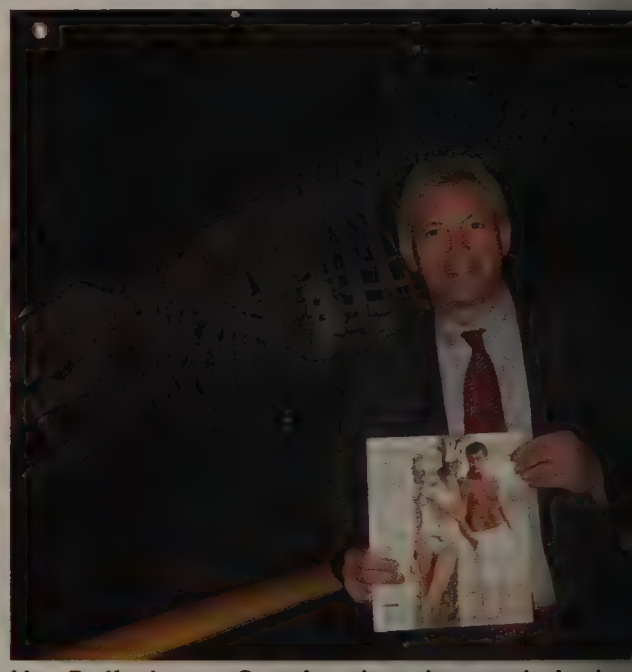
Congresswoman Anna Eshoo's friendship with Mike Myers inspired one of our favorite Austin Powers quotes: "Honestly, who throws Eshoo?"

David Pint, Wolfgang Geotzinger and Steffi Burdack were in Germany for the U.S. World Cup match against Ghana. The American team sure made everyone proud! (Everyone in Ghana, that is.)



New Bedford mayor Scott Lang brought us to the local whaling museum. The music selection was pretty limited. I just a lot of Whale-on Jennings and Scott Whale-and.

Annette Gonsalves ditched her own wedding in favor of a week in Paradise Island with our wedding issue. Sounds like a fair trade to us.

When it comes to summer fun down in Aruba some people drink daiquiris on the beach. Jessica and Janelle Micaloonis count the dead.

Table for Eight

4 men. 4 women. For dinner

MOPSY

REALITY DINING

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service. Five parties cost $225.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late 20s to late 40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 85 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table — located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral — must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

"Hey Regina, I just went to my first Table for Eight dinner and it was a blast! The women I met were great...attractive, fun and intelligent and the guys were actually pretty cool too. After trying the online thing and being completely "over" the bar scene I was a little apprehensive, but the whole experience was more than I expected. I'm looking forward to attending another dinner party soon!"

A FREE FOR ALL TO KEEP IT "FREE TO ALL"....

The bookworms, bibliophiles, literati and glitterati were out in full force for the Boston Public Library's annual black-tie "Exploration" gala.

You'd be hard-pressed to find a more magnificent setting for a party, and to ensure that they explored the entire space, guests were issued passports that could be stamped in each room. Those who filled their passports were eligible to win the raffle prize of a deluxe stay across the street at the Copley Plaza.

Before dinner, everyone inhaled sushi and other delicious little nibbles, after which a seated dinner ensued, followed by drinks and dancing until the proverbial cows came home.

Present and accounted for: mega-philanthropists John and Diddy Cullinane, a large chunk of the extremely beneficent D'Arbeloff clan—P.A., Brit, Alex, George, Jill, John, Nick and Mindy (with her husband, Jim Peyser)—gubernatorial hopeful Chris Gabrielli and the lovely Hilary, the slinky Maggie Ahearn with her real estate mogul husband, Kevin, marketing maven David Grossman and his delightful other half, Mary Jo Sisk, Raytheon head honcho William Swanson, his protégé John Harris II and John's stunning other half, Linda Sawyer, legal eagle Jeffrey Rudman, bright young things Jennifer Khoury and John Judge, toothsome TV news personalities Anthony Everett, with his wife, Lydia, and Lisa Hughes, with her husband, Mike Casey, the BSO's beautiful Nina Jung, the effervescent Connie Brown squired by Newport nabob Trey Agnew, the über-glamorous Alison Boston and her software mogul main squeeze Alan Matthews, education czar Tom Payzant and the lovely Helen, and one guest who said, "I'm a board member," to which a friend replied, "Oh. How bored are you?"

However, the funniest exchange occurred when one guest said, "I'm half English and half Russian," to which someone responded, "Oh, that means you have two livers."

WHAT'S A LITTLE BESTIALITY BETWEEN FRIENDS?

All the party animals turned out for Zootopia, a fundraiser for the Franklin Park Zoo held beneath a big white tent somewhere between the gorilla enclosure and the African savannah.

Guests could purchase stuffed animals for $50 or $100 that won them prizes guaranteed to be worth more (a good deal if ever we've heard of one), and after cocktails and dinner, there was music and dancing, despite the fact that many high heels were sinking into the mud following two days of torrential rain. As one woman put it, "This isn't great for the Gucci shoes, but what the hey."

At Zootopia: Jeff and Nicole Bellows and Bryan Rafanelli; the new tiger.

The well-dressed, well-heeled crowd was especially good-looking and included the likes of absurdly photogenic pair Jeff and Nicole Bellows, son-of-a-Speaker-man Tom O'Neill, Chestnut Hill party stalwarts Natalie Gardiner and John Hambright, the delightful Lois Catanzaro, car czar Don Rodman, TV news babe Rhondella Richardson, lovable shutterbug Cheryl Richards, Credit Suisse hottie Greg Boyle and his gorgeous wife, Deanna, heartthrob restaurateur Matt Burns, power couple Andrea and Gordon Clagett, the exquisite Kathryn Conway, and one man-about-town who regarded the animal-print tablecloth and said, "I feel like I'm at home in bed." (We hope he was joking.)

After returning from a visit to the new tiger exhibit, meanwhile, another guest said, "I love baby animals," to which a friend replied, "Me, too. In fact, I'm dating one."

THE PERKS OF THE FREE SHRIMP CIRCUIT...

The new Valentino boutique on Newbury Street opened with a fair amount of fanfare and folderol, namely a superswanky cocktail reception and dinner to benefit the Museum of Fine Arts.

The soirée attracted all the usual suspects, among them: Bob and Ruth Remis (as in the auditorium at the MFA) with their daughter-in-law, Pam, her sister, the very fabulous Randi Cutler, the drop-dead gorgeous Julianna Ramirez, Estrellita Karsh (one of Valentino's first customers and the widow of famed portrait photographer Yusuf), the beyond-lovely Peggy Henry, real estate gajillionaire Paul Roiff, hunky high-life entrepreneur Seth Greenberg, the soignée Marilyn Keane, supermode nurse's clothing Bronwyn Webster, comme il faut Judy Virr and her dau ter, Tess Atkinson, fashion plates Di Gordon and Harriet Lewis, yachtsm about-town Peter Creighton, finan titan Richard DeAgazio, white-hot erary agent Esmond Harmsworth (of the English press baron Lord Roth mere), belt and handbag designer Had Pollett, and one woman who bolted n conversation without excusing hers when she learned about a 40-percent sale rack in the back of the store.

FREEWHEELING

Most of the IMPROPER's 25 issues a year focus on a single theme (dining, dating, fashion, etc.), but sometimes we like to mix it up. For our cover story this issue, staffer Rich Levine caught up with Sox pitcher Josh Beckett just moments after he signed a $30 million contract extension that will keep him in Boston for another three years. Beckett opens up about everything from winning the World Series at age 23 to his new life in Boston.

For a city with so much wealth, where are all the flashy cars? IMPROPER staffer and car fanatic Ezra Dyer takes a Bentley to Newbury Street and talks to local Ferrari owners about why Lambos and their ilk are a rare sight on our streets. Writer Keith Griffin continues the automotive theme with a look at th coolest gadgets in new car models.

Finally, check out Liza Weisstuch's story on four jobs that'll turn you green with envy this summer.

STAYIN' ALIVE

I was horrified to read about Fugakyu's live-fish sashimi ("Dish," July 12), and to realize that the IMPROPER had given the practice a place of esteem simply by writing about it in the first place. I look forward to the day when the despicable practices of meat production are a thing of the past, but to think that we live in a time when eating live animals is seen as a gimmick—one that's funny enough to make jokes about—definitely makes me feel even sadder for humanity than I did yesterday.

BASHING THE BEST

Awarding "Best Bar in Faneuil Hall" to Houston's (Boston's Best Issue, July 12) was a slap in the face to every local establishment that contributes to Boston's character. Regulars at places such as the Green Dragon have included Paul Revere and other forefathers. Truly a neighborhood bar, the Dragon attracts residents of nearby streets, a few of whom work there. Newcomer Red Sky provides an upscale atmosphere, adventurous fare and a well-dressed crowd. The owners' personalities and smart concept are winning over neighbors. These fine establishments both deserve awards. For those of us whose windows look upon Faneuil Hall, Houston's is just a poorly placed neon sign.

—BRIAN BRANDT
Boston

JUST THE FACTS

The film reviewed in your June 28 issue, Who Killed the Electric Car, might be con sidered a documentary if even a single exculpatory fact had been included. Sin it wasn't, the film is nothing more than usual left-wing moan of self-abuse. The was withdrawn from service for several reasons and, of course, none of these iss were brought up in the film, nor were a users interviewed who didn't like the ca The people who raved about them were rarely owners. But to bring these deficie cies up would've horribly diluted the an big business message the director wants clearly to broadcast. Chris Paine, meet Michael Moore.

THE WORD

EDITED BY ERIN GRAHAM

A Dive Revived

Like many JP residents, Relena Erskine and her fiancé, Lyndon Fuller, liked to stop by the beloved, no-frills Centre Street dive Triple D's for a pint and some palaver. But unlike most of Triple D's regulars, Erskine and Fuller's visits inspired them to muse about the slightly sticky (yet endearingly scruffy) space's potential for bigger things. As far back as two years ago, the couple were plotting an altruistic overhaul, Erskine remembers: "We've lived in JP for 10 years, and wanted to give something back." Fast forward to this July: The couple have quit their waitstaff jobs at posh downtown restaurants, and have bought, gutted, renovated and reopened Triple D's as a hip restaurant/bar, rechristening it the Alchemist Lounge. Gone are the talk-show-blaring TVs, wood paneling and jalapeño poppers. In their places are exposed brick walls, giant glass windows and upscale menu items like paella with saffron risotto ($19) and grilled rosemary lamb salad ($10). The only remaining vestiges of Triple D's are—literally—the table stands and stool bottoms, recycled by the new owners in the spirit of continuity (and pragmatism).

While it may seem like sacrilege to the die-hard anti-gentrification contingent, the transformation of Triple D's into the Alchemist Lounge has been an inclusive one. To complement the reused barstools and table stands, Erskine and Fuller managed to snag some goth light fixtures, which—purely by coincidence—came from the church attended by the previous owner and his kids. But the true mark of success, Erskine says, is that the old D's crowd has checked it out—and keeps coming back. It's definitely diverse: When we stopped by, there was a gaggle of girls having a birthday party in the minimalist dining room, couples cozied up in booths dining à deux in the lounge, and 20-something friends swilling margaritas at the bar next to the old guard drinking Dark-and-Stormies.

The patrons aren't the only source of local color at the Alchemist. Chef Greg Collins lives across the street, and nearly all of the staff live locally, too. What's more, JP companies are involved: The Guinness floats are made with JP Licks' white coffee bean ice cream, a flavor made just for the restaurant; and Sam Adams just finished its first batches of Alchemist Pale Ale, a brew exclusive to the Lounge. Capacity is currently capped at 75, but that number will almost double when the licensing red tape gets unraveled. Late-night, lunch and brunch menus are all in the works, as is nightly entertainment. 435 South Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain (617-477-5741). —EG

Funny Girls

From Aug. 4–6, Jimmy Tingle's Off Broadway Theater Somerville hosts ColorStruck, the seventh annual cel bration of women of color in comedy. The weekend fe tures performers from all over the Northeast, but w caught up with some of the show's homegrown talent comedians Deb Farrar-Parkman, Bethany Van Del Janet Cormier and Sandy Asai—to talk some comedy.

Improper Bostonian: What's your favorite knock-kno joke?

Deb Farrar-Parkman: I'd have to say the orange on You know, orange you glad I didn't say banana?

Bethany Van Delft: Knock, knock. Who's there? Inte rupting cow. Interrup—MOOO!

Janet Cormier: People always tell me I should write knock-knock joke, but the problem is that I own a hon with the thinnest walls you've ever seen. And I can't t any jokes there because they'd know it was me befor even knocked.

IB: What's your favorite real joke to tell?

Sandy Asai: People ask why my family left Japan, an say, "Duh. Godzilla."

BVD: One cow says to another cow, "How do y know if you've got mad cow disease?' And the other co says, "I don't know. I'm not a cow, I'm a helicopter!"

JC: In my act, I say, "I heard that Congress is discounti terrorism, which is great, because I feel like we've ready paid for that enough."

IB: If you could see one comedian, dead or alive, perfor who would it be?

BVD: Without a doubt, Richard Pryor or Lenny Bruc They shaped comedy into what it is today.

SA: Woody Allen. The first time I saw his set it mesm ized me.

DFP: I was fortunate enough to have seen Richard Pry live, which was great. Other than that, I'd love to s George Carlin or go back and see Moms Mabley. H stuff might be a little dated now, but it's still hilarious.

The Bean

Bean Town... What's big, round, reddish-brown and good for your heart? Answer: Boston's new mascot! In the coming months, you'll be able to see the Bean (as he's been named) popping up all over town, making appearances at charity events, city functions, Fenway Park and sometimes just chilling out in Boston Common. But don't think this is happening without someone making a profit. A legume-themed gift shop is opening this month on Newbury Street, offering a whole line of bean-inspired products for Bostonians and tourists to spend their money on. Just don't eat too much of his baked namesake, because... well... you remember the song.

Motley Home

Lilia Lopez

Be Jeweled... Überfashionable high-end clothing, shoe and accessory spots are popping up all over the city. The newest addition is jewelry boutique Lilia Lopez. Cousin to Carolina Herrera and jewelry designer for many a Hollywood star, Lopez has opened a Newbury Street shop to join her existing stores in Venezuela and Florida, and boutiques in the Hamptons, Nantucket and Aspen. You'll find handcrafted, sparkly, oversized pieces made with sterling silver and 18k gold, decorated with colorful semi-precious and precious stones. Prices range from $89–$40,000. 154 Newbury St., Boston (617-267-2403). www.lilialopez.com.

Motley Crew... Doug Palardy, owner of the South End boutique ley, has teamed up with his longtime friends Jimmy Ward and Jim Conr create their own brand with the opening of Motley Home. Just a st throw away from Motley on Tremont Street, Motley Home's got the retro-inspired feel, but with an emphasis on fun stuff for the home: Jona Adler's ceramic boxes and lacqu lamps ($22–$800), Barware Roost decorative glasses ($12 up) and a variety of Umbra good cluding lamps and furniture $250). "We want to build a M brand," Ward says, "that repre everything South Enders are lo for." And they're not done yet of a third shop has already b 652 Tremont St., Boston (617- 5566). www.motleyhome.com.

Bright Lights, Big City... It's mated that more than 400 Holly films and TV shows have been s and around Boston. Now movie and TV nerds can get a behind scenes peek at some of the more notable filming locations around the Hub, through tour called Theater-on-Wheels. The bus tour takes you to celluloid spots: the L Tavern, where they shot scenes for Good Will Hunting; the street from the Blown Aw crash; spots from Mystic River; and the building where Ally McBeal was supposed to worked. During the tour, five plasma TVs run clips of the movies and shows bein cussed. The standard package ($35 for adults) includes a three-hour tour and hour of pool at the Rack. Private, customized options are also available. www.b movietours.net. —Leslie P. Kilgore

FASH FLASH

Crisply Tailored, With a Twist

The men's-style white shirt instantly invents a persona: the femme fatale when teamed w pencil skirt, pumps and red lips; the cut-throat professional when worn confidently under a fectly fitted pantsuit; casually sexy goddess when worn with tousled locks and denim. But h many white shirts have you purchased, thinking, "This is the one!" only to be let down b limpness when you retrieve it from the crumpled heap that serves as your closet? Well, prob solved. Last month, Maha Barsom, a Syrian designer who studied haute couture in Paris and rently teaches at the Rhode Island School of Design, opened the Maha Barsom boutique sleek space that's an ode to the white shirt. Her concept is simple: beautiful white shirts m from the best cotton (Sea Island, treated in Switzerland and woven in Japan), with mother pearl buttons and hand-sewn details. It's smart and sophisticated, tailored and feminine. Pr start at $165 for a sleeveless, princess-cut design; a crisp, long-sleeved wrap version costs $ She also offers custom pieces, as well as demi-couture and haute-couture lines of shirts, prices available upon request. 127 A Newbury St., Boston (617-247-1103). —Marni Elyse Kat

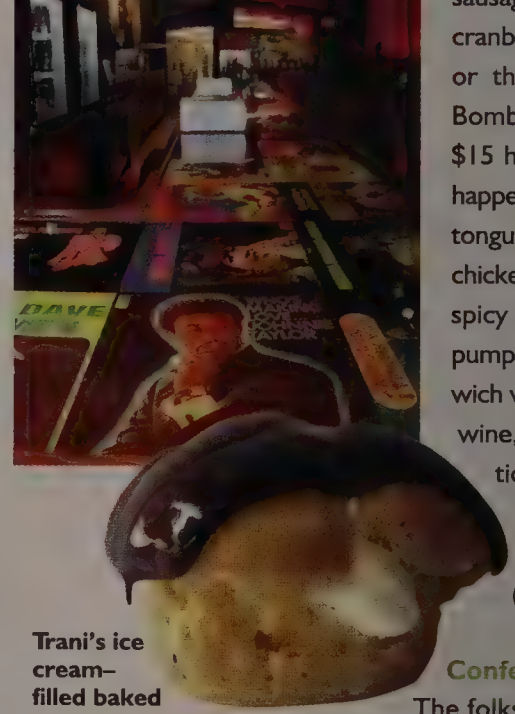
TASTY TIDBITS

Farewell, Fournier

Fresh Start for Fournier... After two years at the Metropolitan Club in Chestnut Hill, chef Jeffrey Fournier is branching out, leaving the Met to open a restaurant of his own. Some details—like a name and location—are still being ironed out, but Fournier plans to have his new restaurant up and running by fall. He tells us the modern bistro will feature an eclectic menu with global influences, and he'll decorate the walls with artwork created by himself. You'll notice Fournier's stamp on the music as well, with the piped-in tunes comprising some of his own indie-rock favorites. Stay tuned for details.



DIY BBQ... Barbecue joints are hardly a novel concept around the Hub, but owner Wyeth Lynch has added a new wrinkle to the local barbecue scene with Soul Fire, which opened this summer in Allston Village. Lynch's new spot features a do-it-yourself sauce bar, with an endless selection of sauces like tomato-based, vinegar and peppers, and mustard that can add a little spice to any of the various maple-, hickory- or oak-flavored meats on the menu. There are also meat-free dishes like mac 'n' cheese, fresh salads and catfish, and the spot features a bar where you can kick back and enjoy a sound system that pumps out—you guessed it—soul music. 182 Harvard St., Allston (617-787-3003).

Trani's ice cream–filled baked good

Set for Sandwiches... The question lately on local foodies' minds: When will Chris Schlesinger (of East Coast Grill fame) finally open the doors to his All-Star Sandwich shop in Cambridge's Inman Square? The latest estimate is mid-August, but from the looks of the menu, it'll be worth the wait. The 34-seat shop offers nearly 30 variations on the sandwich, ranging from classics like PB&J ($2.75) and a BLT ($5.75) to more creative options like the Gobbler ($8), which includes roasted turkey, apple-sausage stuffing and orang cranberry relish on brioch or the monstrous All-S Bomb, aka the Clogger–$15 heart attack waiting happen that includes brisk tongue, roast pork should chicken liver and bacon, w spicy mustard on oversiz pumpernickel. All-Star San wich will also serve beer a wine, as well as dessert c tions like cookies a brownies. 1245 Ca bridge St., Cambric (617-868-3065).

Confection Injection... The folks over at Trani, a n pastry shop that opened last month on Sal Street in the North End, have found the s cret to making dessert even better: Just inj it with more dessert. The shop has all yo basic pastry essentials like cupcakes, éclai puffs, cakes and cannolis, but thanks to patented ice cream–injecting machine, the doesn't stop there. Just choose your desir baked good and before you know it, your p try will come equipped with an ice cream ce ter. Now if they could just devise a machine subsequently suck out all the calories, we'll really impressed. 111 Salem St., Boston (61 624-0222).

STEEPLE PEEPS

After going to church, I see that my future is bright. And fiery.

It seems that the guy who stands outside Fenway handing out pamphlets is right: I'm going to hell. And not just in the euphemistic way—I'll literally be spending eternity in the warm place, stuck behind the wheel of a Yugo in a heatwave in a traffic jam on I-93 with a backseat full of rotten baloney and a radio permanently tuned to Shakira yodeling. Actually, since hell is supposed to be worse than anything you could even imagine, I'll probably be in that Yugo with Creed frontman Scott Stapp riding shotgun. Naked. And singing along with Shakira. And the view out the windshield isn't even the traffic jam, but an endless loop of Gigli.

There are a lot of reasons why I'll go to hell. I use those charity return-address stickers on my mail without actually donating any money. I once submitted a song based on 2 Live Crew's "Me So Horny" to a Christian Web site that rewrites pop music with religious music. My song, "Me So Holy," was never published, which means that they probably didn't cotton to lyrics like, "You used to be a pagan, until you met me/I was the first to make you pray, to God-y God-y." I might even end up in Hindu hell, because when I was in India I told a cow she was ugly.

So I've suspected for a while that I'm hellbound, but now I know for sure because I recently went to church. And not just a wimpy liberal Northeastern church. I donned my Sunday best and hit up a rural North Carolina church, because that's what you do when you're in North Carolina on a Sunday. It's either church or tending your moonshine still.

I'll admit that I don't have much of a religious background, although I did recently read The Da Vinci Code, which I understand implies that Jesus was an albino monk who was married to Sir Issac Newton. (Or something along those lines—that book was such a page-turner that I read it really fast!) So church figured to be a learning experience.

This particular flock was led by the charismatic Pastor Dean, whose constantly varying vocal inflection reminded me of a polished radio DJ, kind of like the Ryan Seacrest of the Lord. We kicked things off with a bit of singing, or in my case, tuneless humming, because I didn't know any of the songs. Eventually we got to one I knew, when "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" came up. Why, you ask, were we singing "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" in church? Because God is the ultimate umpire. I like that imagery. Youu'rrrrrre outta here! And by "here," I mean, "heaven."

Just when I began to worry that th church stuff was just a bunch of feel-go sing-alongs and baseball analogies, Pas Dean got down to some old-fashioned f and brimstone. "Our theme today is t Lord's justice," he began. Pastor De then explained how when you cross Go you're "punished with everlasting d struction." That was more like it. If I going to go to church, I want to he about all the bad things that are going happen to people who are at hom watching the NFL pregame shows.

Unfortunately, as Pastor Dean we on, it became clear that the whole eve lasting destruction thing applies not ju to your obvious candidates, like Carr Top, but to regular folk who might ju happen to suspect that Charles Darw might've been onto something. "Y don't have to shake your fist at God end up in hell," said the pastor, "all y have to do is ignore Him." Ruh-ro

I'VE SUSPECTED FOR A WHILE THAT I'M HELLBOUND, BUT NOW I KNOW FOR SURE

Does going to church once every 20 yea count as ignoring?

Pastor Dean really lost me at the ne part. According to him, you can be th best person in the world, but if you don "know Jesus," you're going to hell. Mea while, a total butthead who's down wi J.C. steps straight into heaven's VIP lin Hope you brought your sunbloc Ghandi!

Despite my theological quandarie everyone at church was very nice, inclu ing Pastor Dean, who politely avoide mentioning the whole everlasting d struction thing re: myself when I spoke him after the sermon. See, he's going be marrying my fiancée and me in a fe months, and we figured it'd be good meet him and say howdy. So while might not be on BFF status with the ma upstairs, I can at least check "living sin" off my list of offenses. And if I st end up in hell, that's not all bad. I've a ways wanted to meet Martha Stewart.

TWO MANNYS, ONE GOAL

What a boring team this would be without them.

Things were going too smoothly. Between the winning and the influx of incredible young talent, 2006 was unlike any Red Sox season since No. 24 arrived in left field.

As the second season started, I made my way down to Fenway Park to check out our guys. This really was a good thing, more so than usual, because real baseball was back after three days and I was tired of talking about the latest "Manny moment."

Like most of you, I'd had enough of the infamous "balky knee," as his skipper called it several days before the All-Star break. I'd had enough of Theo Epstein's pontification on how the Sox medical staff will have to manage Manny's knee for the remainder of the season. I even found myself yawning when Old Faithful himself, David Ortiz, joined the Manny Defense Organization, arguing that Father Time is sneaking up on Manny's body.

In the 21st century, a Red Sox season is as much about managing Manny as it is managing the 40 or so other players who'll make their way through the clubhouse over six months.

There are a lot of things a manager needs to know about good ol' Manny, such as when to take him out of a game. When things get out of hand, not relieving him at the proper time in the game could mean you lose Manny for the next day or two. (You know how quickly those hamstrings can tighten up on those beds at the Ritz.) And we all know the Red Sox need the sure-thing Hall of Famer in the lineup as many days as possible. In other words, a happy Manny—basically, a Manny who just has no rules in life—is a productive Manny.

It all really comes down to one thing, as a very prominent player told me in spring training after I asked him if he was sick and tired of Manny's antics each season.

"We need him to win," said the player.

It was an eye-opener for me. If this guy, a star in his own right, can live with Manny being Manny, why can't you, me and the fence post shut our mouths and accept it?

With that said, the first day of the second half also meant catching up with the other Manny, Manny Delcarmen.

The last time I spoke with the local kid was during spring training. His hair was long and his answers were short, and he had the look of a guy who wanted to be a full-time big leaguer, but you could see that he wasn't quite there yet.

But things have changed dramatically over the last few months for the kid who grew up just a few miles from Fenway. H no longer the goofy kid from spring traini Between April and the All-Star break, D carmen became a major league man, pit ing meaningful innings alongside so other young swashbucklers.

It's been an amazing season when y think about what's transpired. I don't w to say that the general success of the yo Sox hurlers was unexpected, because knew the team had talent waiting in t wings. We just didn't realize it would h pen this quickly.

The 25-and-under club includes Delc men, Jonathan Papelbon, Craig Hans and, last but certainly not least, one of favorites, Jon Lester. These guys are tu ing out to be more than role playe They're saving the season.

Better yet, look around the league. T biggest weakness in baseball is middle lief. Well, it's turning into a major streng for the Red Sox.

A RED SOX SEASON IS AS MUCH ABOUT MANAGING MANNY AS IT IS THE 40 OR SO OTHER PLAYERS WHO MAKE THEIR WAY THROUGH THE CLUBHOUSE.

Manny Delcarmen has, at least in t short term, fixed a big hole on this tea His fastball explodes in the mid-to-upp 90s. Even better, his minor league chan up and curveball have become approv for the big leagues.

And unlike the other Manny, Delc men is low maintenance. He quietly do his job. He hangs with his buddies on t team. He respectfully greets his teamma and the media.

The Sox aren't going anywhere withe both of these Mannys. High maintenan or low maintenance, these two will heavily relied upon if the team is to p baseball in October.

I think it's great. The two Mann Manny Drama and Manny No Drama.

HOLLY NADLER

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Self-confessed gossip, author, television sitcom writer and journalist Holly Nadler was raised in Los Angeles and graduated from UCLA. For many years, she lived and worked as a sitcom writer in L.A. and was married to the legendary TV writer/producer Marty Nadler (Happy Days, Laverne and Shirley, The Odd Couple, Perfect Strangers). Holly's work has appeared in Cosmopolitan, the Utne Reader, Woman's World, Cape Cod Life, Vineyard Style and Martha's Vineyard Home and Gardens. Her books include Haunted Island: True Ghost Stories from Martha's Vineyard, and Ghosts of Boston Town: Three Centuries of True Hauntings. She began spending her summers on Martha's Vineyard in the late 1970s and moved there full-time in the fall of 1991. Her new book, Vineyard Confidential, dishes the dirt on the island's celebrity residents and legendary characters. She lives in Oak Bluffs, where she operates a walking ghost tour business and the store Sun Porch Books.

Jonathan Soroff: How many friends do you think you're going to lose over your new book?

Holly Nadler: I'm actually on my way to see a friend after I leave here. I said some pretty snide things about the summer crowd in Chilmark, especially the nouveau riche who had originally bought in Edgartown and then realized it didn't have the cachet, so they sold and moved up-island, and I wrote about the whole party circuit. I don't know if my friend is going to slap me.

JS: You were pretty unsparing with Jackie Onassis, and she's a bit of a sacred cow around here.

HN: Yeah, and I don't know why. Why is she? I mean, she was certainly lovely, and I wish I looked that good in clothes, but I never really got why she inspired so much devotion, to the extent that I could never get people who knew or worked for her to tell me anything. And when she died, I heard that she didn't leave anything specifically to any island charity, which struck me as sort of ungrateful to an island that had so carefully guarded and respected her privacy.

JS: So why is everyone on this island a lunatic?

HN: The farther you get from any landmass, the freer you get. There are no real social barriers here. For instance, people seldom ask, "What do you do?," the way they do in the city. I think you just step into the shoes of whomever you truly are. People here can be as flamboyant and outrageous as they want. I find myself getting more eccentric as the years go by.

JS: The story you've dined out on the most?

HN: The one about John Belushi's body being moved. The undertaker who did it told my husband, "He looks great. He's lost weight." Or when we bought Lillian Hellman's chairs and the antiques dealer asked her if she wanted to meet us. When she heard Marty's [sitcom] credits she said, "Well, they can meet me but it'll cost 'em another thou'."

PEOPLE HERE CAN BE AS FLAMBOYANT AND OUTRAGEOUS AS THEY WANT. I FIND MYSELF GETTING MORE ECCENTRIC AS THE YEARS GO BY.

JS: Favorite Vineyard character?

HN: I think Trina Kingsbury, who's Craig Kingsbury's daughter. The character of Quint in Jaws was modeled on him, and she's just a living legend. She's thrown men across barroom floors. She'll still give someone a good pounding if they look at her the wrong way. There've always been great stories about her, like the time she hijacked a plane to take her sick pig to the vet.

JS: Who has the most celebrity wattage on the island?

HN: Judging by the frantic party circuit of the Up-Islanders [people who live in Chilmark and Aquinnah], Larry David, Ted Danson and Mary Steenburgen, and the Dershowitzes are the ones everyone wants at their parties.

JS: Celebrity you'd most like to see move here?

HN: Mick Jagger. I still want to sleep with him.

JS: One celebrity you'd hate to see move here?

HN: Donald Trump.

JS: Most salacious piece of gossip you ever heard?

HN: There were some things I didn't put in the book, because I don't really like the sex stuff. Some things that were just a little nasty, or petty, like I heard from the friend of a boutique owner in Oak Bluffs that Jackie O bought some clothes there and then asked if she could have a discount, and I just thought that was sort of a petty thing to include in my book.

JS: One piece of gossip that you absolutely know is true?

HN: It's all true. [Laughs.] I know that Mike Wallace forced a woman off the road one night and then just sailed away. I've also always found the whole story of Chappaquiddick and Ted Kennedy awfully sad. I talked to the diver who recovered Mary Jo's body and he said it was contorted in such a way that it suggested she may have been breathing in an air pocket, which can last up to 12 hours, and the minute Ted Kennedy surfaced, there was a house right there with the lights on and a working telephone and the lady of the house at home. Almost undoubtedly, he could've saved her. I like Ted Kennedy, but I think it was one of those crossroads in life where you do the wrong thing, and of course he paid for it dearly.

JS: So what do you think of Nantucket?

HN: [Laughs] I've only been there twice, each time for an afternoon, and both times I couldn't wait to leave. We feel that way about them. They feel that way abou
The rivalry is just ferocious.

Mohegan Sun's 10th ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

ace IN THE HOLE

BY RICH LEVINE PHOTOGRAPH BY KERRY BRETT HURLEY

Josh Beckett's pretty much your average 26-year old. You know the type: three years removed from a legendary World Series–performance at Yankee Stadium; a list of ex-girlfriends whose photos grace the bedroom walls of sexually deprived adolescents all over the country; and, of course, a brand spanking new contract that potentially pays $10 million a year until 2010. OK, so maybe his life isn't normal in the slightest; but when you're named World Series MVP at an age when most guys would just be psyched not to be living in their parents' basement, it's safe to say that the rest of your life will be anything but ordinary.

I spoke to Beckett on two occasions—once during our mid-July photo shoot, and gain just hours after he announced the completion of his new contract—and there's ne thing about the future ace of the Boston Red Sox that I can say with 100 percent rtainty: He knows that, because of his past, his young age is insignificant. That even ough he's a mere seven months older than rookie stud nathan Papelbon, has never pitched more than 200 nings in a season and has won more than 10 games in season only once, he'll never be allowed the amount of ack that most pitchers his age enjoy. Beckett knows all is, and he wouldn't have it any other way. "I realize at since the World Series, people expect a lot more t of me, and I expect just as much out of myself," he ys. "But it's better that way. If the expectations were ly mediocre, I might just be a mediocre pitcher. It's hat keeps me going."

The expectations were always there. He was drafted ght out of high school by the Marlins with the second erall pick in the 1999 draft and decided not to go to llege, instead opting to head straight for the minors, here he stayed for two years before making his major ague debut in September 2001. But aside from the fall 2003, when he and the Marlins made their historic n to the World Series, Beckett has played most of his ort career—as far as blue-chip, future franchise pitch- s go—in relative obscurity. In Boston, baseball is a way life. In Florida, it's a hobby that fans try to squeeze in tween playing golf and working on their tans. Very w of Beckett's starts in Florida came before a sell-out owd. In fact, most games it must've felt like there were ore guys sitting in the Marlins' dugout than in the nds. Was it tough to get fired up for games under those conditions?

"Yeah, it was definitely hard during [some of those times in Florida]," he says. "But hat you learn to do is just block everything out, so that when you're on the mound it esn't matter whether or not anyone is there at all. All you worry about is pitching, d nothing else matters."

But last November, Beckett, along with teammates Alex Gonzalez and Mike Lowell, as traded to a place where everything matters; where fans turn against World Series roes in the blink of an eye and where, as of late, the media's relationship with local hletes has been tumultuous at best. And with his reputation as a somewhat cocky, ex- table guy with a penchant for the nightlife and recurring blisters that have already nt him to the DL six times during his young career, Beckett might as well have had a ll's eye on his back (just ask Derek Lowe).

Things were relatively quiet early on, until the night of May 15 in Baltimore. After ckett had pitched seven impressive innings against the Orioles, manager Terry Fran- na pulled him from the game. Typically, going to the bullpen wouldn't be cause for ncern, but tonight was different: Josh had given up only two hits and one run, and more importantly had thrown only 80 pitches. Then came the camera footage of Beckett and pitching coach Al Nipper in the dugout between innings examining Josh's middle finger—the one that's been the at the source of most of Beckett's blister issues. The media took the story and ran with it, and Sox fans started popping Xanax like they were Tic Tacs, bracing themselves for their first Beckett-trip to the DL.

False alarm; nothing was wrong. But Beckett had received his first real glimpse of an obsessive baseball culture that only last year turned a first-class, all-star shortstop into Luis Rivera incarnate.

Sure, there was one requisite profanity-laced exchange with the media after the fact, but now, when asked about the mini-drama, Beckett sounds more philosopher than fireballer.

"People have already told you about what it's like in Boston before you get here but I think it just comes with the territory," he says. "You can't let [the media] or anyone dictate what you do out there. They're just trying to do their job. There's a phrase that I like to live by: Think about the results, and that corrupts the process. I just take my career one pitch at a time, and only worry about my job, which is just to get outs."

> "There's a phrase I like to live by: Think about the results, and that corrupts the process. I just take my career one pitch at a time."

It sounds pretty simple when you put it that way, but with most of the men between you and those "outs" looking like they could bench press a small country, it's hardly that easy. And when Beckett is on the mound and within "the heat of the battle," as he calls it, he understands that. He knows that every batter, every out and even every pitch is at a premium, and he shows that on the field. There was the near brawl in spring training with the Phillies' Ryan Howard, the war of words with then-Blue Jays infielder and professional meathead Shea Hillenbrand, as well as countless other emphatic fist pumps and displays of emotion that may have irked opponents but have also shown Sox fans that Beckett cares as much about this team as they do, and that he not only understands the intensity of Red Sox baseball in Boston, but absolutely loves it.

"Signing that contract was what I always wanted to do," he says, "because this is the place I want to play. There's no better place to play baseball. The fans are amazing, and the city is great. You hear the horror stories about what it's like to go out in Boston, but I've never had a problem. Everyone's been great to me and real respectful of my privacy."

We're only four months into his first season with the Sox, and the city and organization are already giddily looking forward to the Josh Beckett years at Fenway Park. Sure, his ERA and home run numbers are up, but that's life when you make the transition from the National League to the American League.

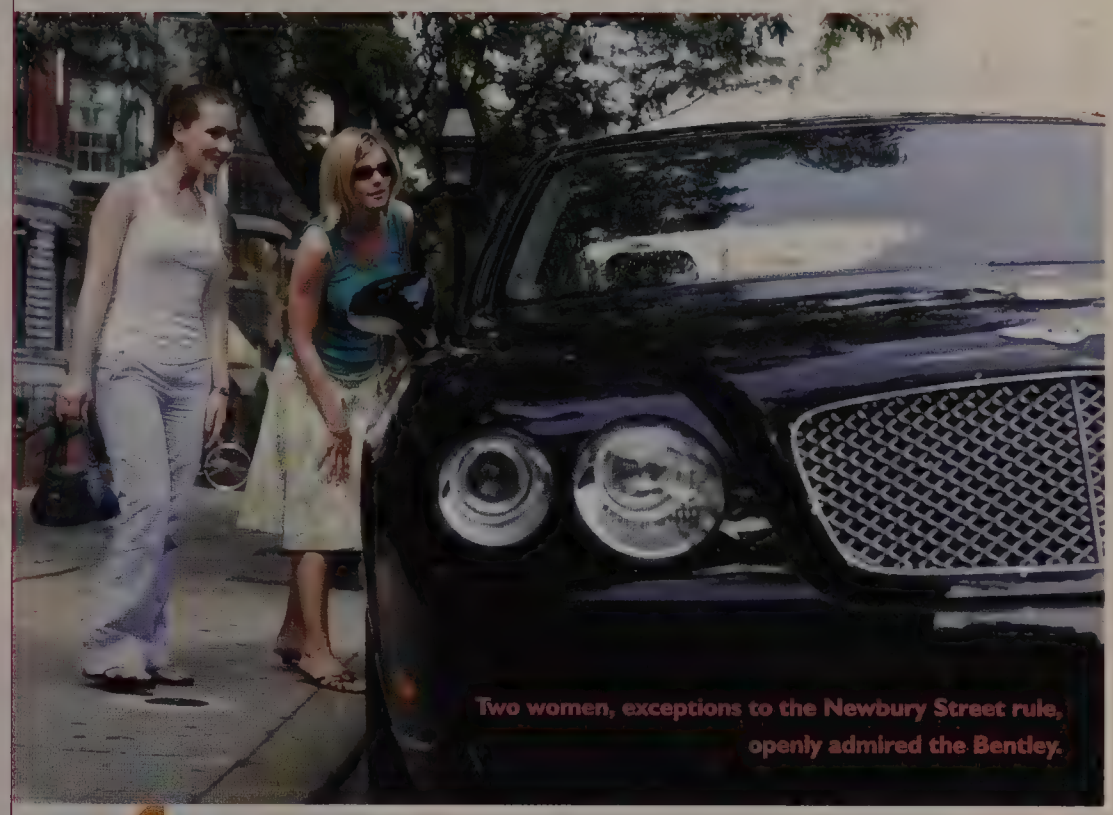
At press time, Beckett is tied with teammate Curt Schilling and Toronto's Roy Halladay for the Major League lead in wins with 13, and he's relishing his dual role as a student of veterans like Schilling, David Wells and Tim Wakefield ("Schilling has helped me so much with the mental part of the game, and guys like Wells and Wake show everyone what it takes to prepare for a full season, year after year"), as well as a mentor to the likes of Jon Lester, Craig Hansen and even Papelbon. He's on pace to finally register that first 200-inning season and set career highs in wins and strikeouts.

But most importantly, we haven't even seen the best of what Beckett has to offer. His age might get lost in the hype surrounding his name, but the truth is that he's yet to hit the prime of his career. He's still got more to learn and still has room to grow. Josh Beckett's still only 26 years old. IB

WHERE THE WILD RIDES ARE

While the well-heeled pedestrians on Newbury Street went out of their way to ignore the Bentley, the beer-swilling, guy-heavy Fenway crowd gave it major props.

BY EZRA DYER PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL MALYSZKO



Two women, exceptions to the Newbury Street rule, openly admired the Bentley.

BOSTON'S GOT SOME BIG BUCKS, SO WHY DON'T WE SEE MORE EXOTIC CARS?

There's a lot of money in Boston. Take a look around at all the new luxury condo buildings. Walk down to the harbor and count the yachts. Pick up the latest Forbes "Richest People" list, which counts 11 Massachusetts residents as billionaires. And yet, strangely, the city's automotive makeup doesn't seem to reflect the old money, new money and in-between money stuffing the wallets of the upper crust. Certainly, BMWs and their ilk are thick on the ground, but the really rare stuff—the triple-digit-pricetag Italian, British and German machinery—is a rare sight, even at Show-Off Central, Newbury Street. According to vehicle registration statistics published by the Boston Globe, there are 222,274 cars registered in Boston. Care to guess how many of those are Lamborghinis? Just one. That's sad, given that there are two DeLoreans and, um, 34,724 Toyotas.

Subjective experience supports the empirical data. To give a few examples, the last time I was in New York I saw two Rolls-Royce Phantoms (list price: $328,750) on the same day, while I've never seen one in Boston. A Mercedes representative once told me a story about pulling up in front of a hotel in Manhattan in an SLR McLaren ($452,750) and meeting rapper Ice-T, who declared, "You, sir, are a pimp!" I've never seen that in Boston, either (Ice-T or an SLR McLaren). And last year I drove a Mercedes SL65 AMG ($186,775) in Miami, and on Lamborghini-infested Ocean Drive it attracted about as much attention as a beige Camry. In Boston, that car's a rock star.

What gives? Why are the rich selfishly denying me the chance to regularly listen to a Ferrari V8 revving up through the gears? Why am I more likely to see a clapped-out Honda Accord with Lambo-style scissor doors than an actual Lambo with Lambo doors? To take the pulse of the city's exotic-car scene, I devised a game plan: First, I'd take a 2006 Bentley Continental Flying Spur to Newbury Street and see what kind of a scene it stirred up—perhaps, like bugs to a bug-zapper, passing exotic-owners would be drawn to the menacing black Bentley and allow me to interrogate them. Then I'd head to Weston to talk to a few Ferrari owners about why, exactly, their cars are the Loch Ness Monsters of Beantown's streets. And probably after that I'd go rob a bank so I can join the Ferrari Club of America, New England chapter. A red F430 would look good on me.

Darius Grala and his Ferrari 360 Challenge Stradale. Grala, like many, many other Ferrari owners, has an F430 on order. A driving instructor and winner of the 2002 Ferrari Challenge race series, Grala will teach you how to wring out your Ferrari as part of an $8,200 course.

Bentley's Continental Flying Spur is the four-door version of the Continental GT, a car that's been a smash hit amongst the kind of people who have their house profiled on Cribs. This is the fastest four-door sedan on earth, with an official top speed of 195 mph and an unofficial top speed north of 200, courtesy of a twin-turbo, 552-horsepower W12 engine. While this is Bentley's "affordable" sedan, these things are all relative. The Flying Spur's base price is $164,990, and this particular Beluga-black example is optioned up to $181,885. Most striking among the options are the 20-inch chrome rims, which set you back $5,840 (but who's counting?). Regarding the car's exclusivity, Bentley's literature claims that if you live in a "major capital city," you'll probably spot a Flying Spur a couple times a month, but again, I've never seen one in Boston.

I park the giant beast on Newbury Street and step away to observe people's reactions. Now, if I were strolling down the sidewalk and spotted this car, I'd certainly take a moment to shamelessly scope it out. But, for the better part of an hour, the Bentley gets relatively little attention. Certain people, ones who recognize what it is, do double-takes or walk up to peer in the windows at the interior. One guy riding past in a Passat leans out the window and shouts, "That s—t's f—king crazy!" But to the majority of passersby, apparently one big black sedan is the same as another. Despite the sparkling Bentley grille and the chrome dubs, this car officially qualifies as understated.

Affirming that point, I walk over to Boylston Street, where a red Ferrari 360 Challenge Stradale is parked across from Copley Square. This is more what I expected—the car is mobbed by gawkers. At any given time, people are crowded around it, posing in front of it, taking photos with cameraphones. At one point, a cop pulls up and gets out of his car. He gazes admiringly at the Italian stallion, strolls right past the Ferrari and its expired meter and the cameraphone crowd re-forms. Obviously, this is a special car, but this scene illustrates just how hard-up Boston is for this kind of vehicle.

I return to the lonely Bentley and point its prow to Weston, to meet the Ferrari boys (and girl).

I head to Weston via Lansdowne Street, which isn't exactly on the way, but I need the Fenway crowd to restore my faith in the Bentley wow-factor. I'm not disappointed. Through the open windows, I can hear speculation on whether I'm a player (at the very least, I'm a playa), and one guy shouts, "Look at the size of those brake discs!" Right on, brother. There is lots of open gawking to assuage my ego (and the car's). That's more like it.

arius Grala is a cool dude. Not only does he own a Ferrari, he races it. Or at lea used to—in 2002 Grala won the Ferrari Challenge race series and, with that mou climbed, moved on to Daytona prototype racing. So, not only can he afford a Ferra can afford to race it, and he's proven himself a better driver than anyone else with low horsey badge on their front fenders. I agree to meet him at a house he's buildin I arrive first. A few minutes later, the placid Weston forest is shattered by an o worldly V8 wail, and around the corner rolls the car from Boylston Street. What a chances? Well, pretty good, actually: I knew Grala drives a Challenge Stradale since there are only 200 examples of that model in the United States, I had a fe that the one in Boston probably belonged to him.

Grala extricates himself from the ground-scraping Ferrari and I inform him th car was probably the subject of 50 different photos as it sat on Boylston Street. "Re he replies. He seems genuinely surprised, but then, unlike me, he doesn't park h and secretly watch it. In fact, he says, the more noticeable your car is, the less you to worry about it. Bostonians are curious about his ride, but certainly not malicio ward it. "People want to look at it, because it's very different," he says. "You dor these around here. I find you can leave the windows open, the keys in the ignitio your wallet on the seat, and nobody will mess with it."

As we're talking, the suburban placidity is rendered asunder once again, and thi a red Ferrari F355 pulls into the driveway. Out climbs Jamie Liu, accompanied b husband, Dennis. Like Grala, the Lius also race their Ferraris—this one is their stre ased car, while at home a race-prepped version awaits an upcoming weekend track at Lime Rock Park. "I thought about driving that one over here, too," Dennis says it probably would've had a hard time getting into the driveway." Driveway incline enough of a challenge to street Ferraris, never mind a lowered, race version.

I hit the Lius and Grala with my main questions: What are the pros and cons of ing an exotic car in Boston, and why don't you see them more around here?

"As for plusses, the main reason you buy a car like this is the way it drives, th you feel the road. That's number one," Grala says. "Also, when you go out to ea never have to worry about finding a parking spot. Wherever you go in the city, the always leaves it right out front. Everything else, though," he says, "is a pain in the Driveways are too steep. People always want to cut you off. And the roads in Bost terrible." He gestures toward his car. "That left-front rim is brand new. I destroye t one on a pothole." What about drive-throughs? "They're tough," Dennis says. "I ed to use a drive-through ATM once and I ended up sitting on the windowsill."

And then there's the weather.

"You're lucky if you can drive a car like this 60 days out of the year, because of the ather," Dennis says. And Grala and the Lius are amongst the hard core, owners who ve their cars every time the sun comes out. "A lot of people own them and don't drive m very much," says Jamie. "For the record," adds Dennis, "we have both taken that on a run to the Lincoln dump—sorry, 'transfer station.'"

So, Boston's got crap roads, crap weather and crazy drivers. That's enough of an envi- mental impediment to driving an exotic, but what about the cars themselves? Don't raris spend as much time in the shop as they do on the road? "Maybe older ones had ability issues, but newer Ferraris are as good as any Toyota," Dennis says. Jamie races "street" F355 (which is emblazoned with pink stickers reading "Girlie Girl Racing" so t, she says, "When I pass the men, they'll know it was a chick who got 'em") and the has 43,000 miles on the odometer. To rack up that lofty (for a Ferrari) mileage, the s take regular road trips. They recently drove to Burlington, Vt. for a fundraiser where y took ill children for rides, culminating in a 20-car parade. They drive to Quebec to e on the track at Mont Tremblant. And, of course, there are the dump runs to Lincoln.

As the sun sets, I bid the Lius and Grala farewell and head for home. They're ab- itely right that Boston's not an ideal place to own a Ferrari, but that doesn't make me nt one any less. I'm consoled, however, by a conversation I had earlier in the day, k on Newbury Street. Next to the Bentley, I chatted up a guy from Florida named l Heitlinger. Heitlinger's business is issuing high-interest loans secured by people's s—essentially automotive equity loans. Thus, he knows better than anyone that a hy car doesn't necessarily indicate a rosy financial picture for the owner, and in fact en means just the opposite. Now, by the time you're buying a Ferrari or Bentley, 're probably not worried about bouncing checks, but Heitlinger says that the more ainable luxury cars, the ones I covet in a more realistic sense—BMW, Mercedes, sche—are often empty status symbols. "If you see someone in a new BMW, it doesn't an they're rich," Heitlinger said. "It just means they can afford $1,500 a month for a payment. From a BMW 750 on down, wealth is a complete illusion." FERRARI EXPERIENCE, HYUNDAI PRICE ow do you get behind the wheel of a sweet car without dropping a house-sized chunk of change? Drive one that belongs to someone else

f your automotive taste skews toward the expensive but you don't want the burden of owning a rich set of wheels, that doesn't mean you can't dip your toe in the exotic ters now and then.

For starters, you could join the Otto Club (www.theottoclub.com), an exotic car share b. Yearly memberships start at $9,500 and provide access to a fleet of sexy beasts, in- ding everything from a Lamborghini Gallardo to a Maserati Quattroporte. For a given mber of points (read: money), you can drive either a top-end car less often, or a less-ex- nsive model more frequently—or, more likely, mix and match to indulge your need for h-octane bigamy. The Otto Club also runs a "test drive" program, where nonmembers n book a car from the collection for a long weekend. A recent example: a Ferrari F355 Spider, delivered to your doorstep, runs $3,000 Thursday to Monday.

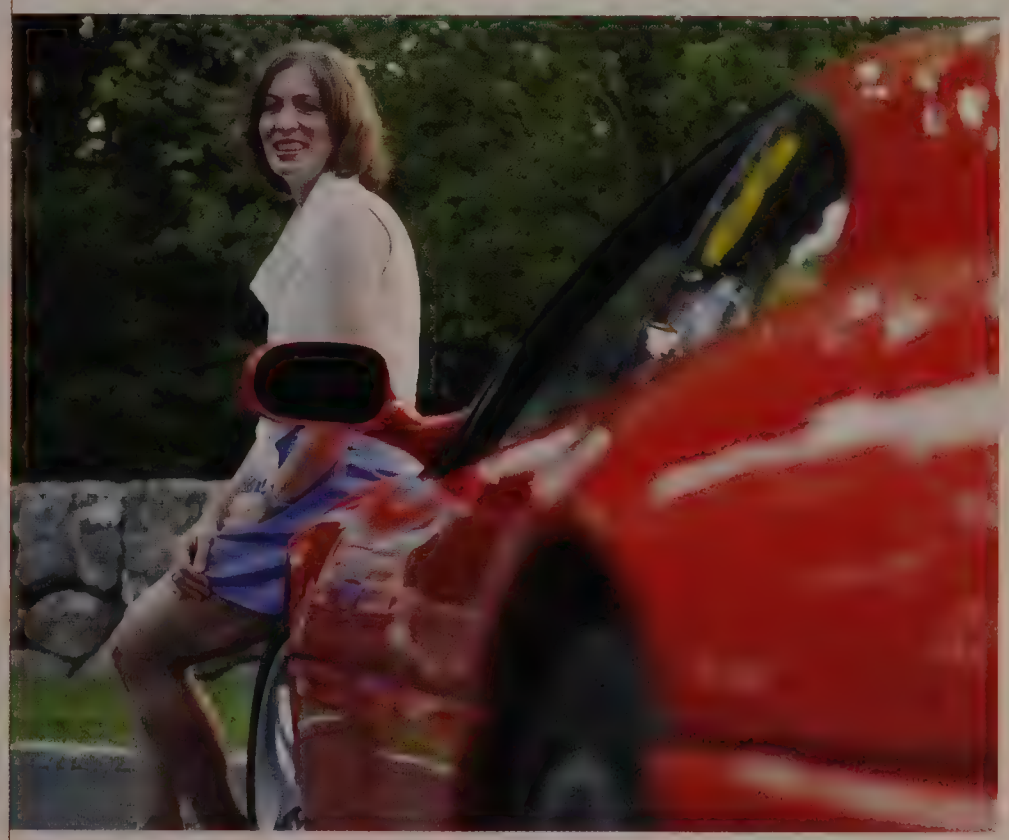
For a brief sampling of some of the best cars in the world, check out the World ass Driving Tour (www.wcdriving.com), which comes to Boston Oct. 17–18. For ,064.65, participants get a 20- to 30-minute stint in six cars from the World Class et. Selections vary from city to city, but, as the name claims, it's all world-class stuff: atured cars include the Ferrari F430, Lamborghini Gallardo, Bentley GT, Ford GT, ton Martin DB9 Volante, Corvette Z06, Ferrari 360 Spider, Mercedes SL 55 AMG, rsche 911 Turbo, Maserati Quattroporte, BMW M5 and Dodge Viper.

If you've got the hankering to drive a car like a Viper, you'd probably do well to get me driving instruction while you're at it. To that end, Skip Barber Racing School ww.skipbarber.com) runs high-performance driving classes at Lime Rock Park race- y in Connecticut. The one-day school costs $1,495 and includes seat time in the er, Porsche 911 and BMW M3.

And then, there's always the old standby: a rental car. Never fear; among the acres of rings and Impalas adorning the local lots lies a small cache of more exciting machin- . Select Car Rental, for instance (www.selectcarrental.com), has locations around city and will hook you up with a Porsche Boxster for $180 per day.

Want to drive a $1.3 million Bugatti Veyron? Yeah, me too. And I've got a plan to ke it happen. How much is Megabucks up to this week?

Jamie Liu is one of the few women racers in the local Ferrari club. Her F355 sees track duty, but she's also used it for mundane tasks, like bringing home a set of china from Montreal—and going to the dump.



URBAN outfitted

these tricked-out cars offer city-dwellers rad rides.

BY KEITH GRIFFIN

Common sense says that Bostonians don't need cars. What with our pleasantly walkable streets and reliable-ish public transportation, we should be able to get by with a comfortable pair of shoes and a T pass. But this is America; we demand the freedom that comes from having our own set of wheels, in spite of the gridlock, scarcity of parking and general rudeness that make city driving an exercise in frustration.

The bad news: There still doesn't exist one übervehicle to suit our urban needs. The good news: Although we still have to wait for an invention that can defeat the Boot, there are plenty of vehicles with add-ons that help make navigating the Back Bay a breeze. Here's a look at some of the latest and greatest in personal-transit technology.

The PCC's 300-foot range gives drivers truly remote control of their car security.

The Volvo S80: Anti-crime Machine

Perhaps the most ingenious device coming to Boston is the Personal Car Communicator. By day it's an innocent-looking key fob that unlocks your Volvo S80 and opens the trunk, but by night it's your best defense against GTA-minded miscreants. The PCC pays tribute to that master of the macabre, Boston-born Edgar Allen Poe; it detects telltale hearts.

Thanks to a trunk-mounted electronic sensor, the PCC can tell an S80 owner whether an intruder lurks inside the car. From as far away as 300 feet, you simply press a button on the fob; if the diodes on the edges begin to flash, you'll have ample warning to beat feet and get help. According to Anders Robertson, manager of product lifecycle for Volvo Cars North America, the sensor can even detect someone placing a hand against the car's body. Just keep in mind that it doesn't distinguish between an escaped felon and the clumsy pedestrian who accidentally bumps into your car, or between humans and other carbon-based life forms. So it can't tell you if that's a cat crawling up inside your engine block or a stalker in the backseat.

The PCC will cost around $500 when the S80, which should retail for about $38,000, is released in February 2007. Atypically, it will be a stand-alone option not requiring the purchase of other expensive technology. (Sadly, Volvo hasn't explored the possibility of retrofitting the PCC to existing vehicles.) And on a mundane note, the communicator also tells you if the car is locked and alarmed. No more wondering, just after you've mounted five flights of stairs to your apartment, "Did I lock my S80?" Then again, Volvo owners generally don't live in fifth-floor walk-ups.

The Dodge Caliber: Ready to Party

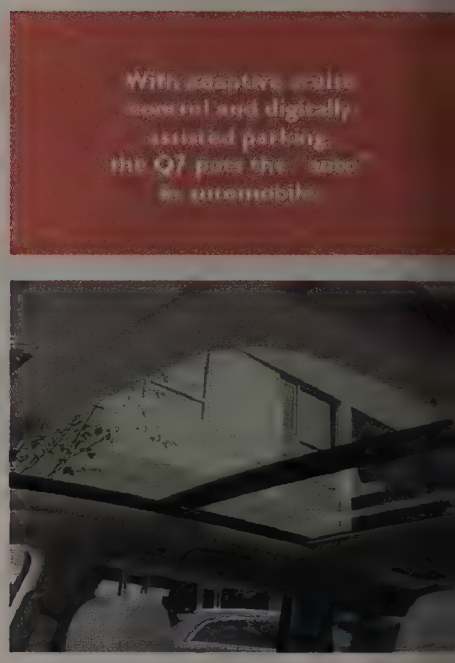
At the lower end of the economic spectrum sits the 2007 Dodge Caliber. It may not have the intruder-detection powers of the Volvo, but with a starting price of just $13,985, it'll let you put aside some coin to spend on a few other outstanding urban features.

First, the air-conditioned models of the gadget-packed hatchback have a cooled beverage-storage bin built into the glove box (so it's driver-accessible). It holds up to four cans or 20-oz. bottles, which means you can keep those Coronas cold while you search for a parking space.

There's also an available nine-speaker Boston Acoustics premium sound system, which includes a subwoofer and two articulating speakers packaged in the liftgate; park the Caliber, pop the liftgate and the speakers flip down. Hook up your iPod and it becomes party central. Between the cooler and the sound system it's a pint-sized Bustonian (sans stripper pole).

And there's always the hip factor to consider. Since replacing that ultimate signifier of squareness, the Dodge Neon, this compact has been a hot seller. Jim Bickford, sales manager at Westminster Dodge in Dorchester, has sold 12 of the models. "We can't get enough," he says. So buy one if you can and develop instant street cred—that is, until a bunch of 65-year-olds start driving it (and you know it's bound to happen).

A liftgate sound system and in-dash cooler are two of the Caliber's hidden delights.



GUANO BE GONE

There are also some great aftermarket items that make urban car ownership a little bit easier. One problem of owning a car in Boston—especially if you park outdoors—are pigeons and their calling cards. HotShot Go, a product designed to ease winter driving, helps city drivers fights this problem year-round. Microheat Inc. of Farmington Hills, Mich., makes the aftermarket heated windshield washer reservoir that you can install in less than 30 minutes. A company spokesman says heated fluid is 40–50 percent more effective at removing bug guts, tree sap and guano, and it cleans the windshield in 90 seconds thanks to repeated blasts of heated cleaning fluid in precise intervals. Normal windshield wiper fluid often smears the stuff all over your windshield the first 50 or so times you squirt it. HotShot Go retails for $165. A wireless version, new for 2007, doesn't require you to run wire through the engine firewall and costs $195. More information is available at www.microheat.com.

If you can't afford a brand-new Q7 or other high-end vehicle with a backup camera or rear detection system, the Rostra Obstacle Sensing System might be just the thing, perfect for lazy vehicle owners. Because it's microwave-based, it can see through snow, mud, ice and even a plastic bumper. Once again, though, the system isn't idiot-proof. There's nothing to stop drivers from ignoring the "beep, beep, beep" and ramming their bumper while trying to squeeze a Hummer into a VW-sized space. The system costs about $250 uninstalled. More info is available at www.rostra.com.

The Audi Q7:
Cruising Without Bruising

The Audi Q7, which retails starting at $49,990, has two great features that make it ideal for urban driving: adaptive cruise control and rearview parking assist. The first of its kind on an SUV, the Q7's adaptive cruise control is also offered in the Mercedes S class and the Audi 6 and 8 sedans. As with standard cruise control, you set the car's maximum speed; what makes it adaptive is a radar system mounted behind the grille. The Q7 uses the radar to determine the distance and velocity of the vehicle in front of you, and it automatically adjusts your own speed accordingly, even coming to a full stop when necessary. As long as it's not a protracted stop—say, three seconds—the system brings you back up to speed when you start moving again. After a longer stop, the driver has to manually resume the cruise control.

Wonder why the system shuts off after three seconds? An Audi engineer says it's because German drivers like to hop out to see what the delay is during traffic backups. Because the car brakes itself to a stop by applying the anti-lock braking system, the theory goes, the German driver might forget the car is in gear, step out on the autobahn, and watch the Audi drive away when the car in front moves. Can you imagine trying to explain to a Boston cop why your Audi just ran a stop sign and got side-swiped by a Duck Tour?

Of course, what makes this a truly great urban option is that it allows the driver to tailgate. The technology is so precise, the driver can set the distance to the car in front as close as one second. There's no way anybody can cut you off and the driver in front of you is instinctively going to drive faster just to get you off his tail. It's a win-win situation.

Flat-screen imaging also comes to your SUV with the Q7. John Suh, a brand specialist at Clair Audi in Westwood, says the rearview parking assist scree located on the dashboard console, is digitized, so doesn't have the fishbowl appearance of your sid view mirror that results in the warning "Objects mirror are closer than they appear." (Definitely problem when you're backing up.)

The rearview parking assist shows yellow lin denoting the vehicle's path to help guide you in the parking space. Each line indicates 42 inches space, so you can tell how close you are to hittin something; get within three feet and an audible si nal kicks in. In fact, it's possible with a little pra tice to park the Q7 just by watching the screen- though Suh cautions that it's still better to tu around and look.

The Future:
Let Your Wheels Do the Parking

Pretty soon affluent drivers won't even have t look at a digitized screen to park their vehicle Within the next year, it'll be possible to buy a c in the U.S. that parks itself. The Lexus 600H, Godzilla-size hybrid that should cost abo $65,000, will be introduced here as a 2008 mode Toyota also has a more Boston-friendly Prius th can parallel park, but that model is staying ove seas for now.

Volvo, working with a Swedish university, has d veloped a self-parking S60 with an automatic tran mission, electrically driven steering and ultrason sensors, supported by an advanced computer th takes up a good chunk of the car's trunk. The syste won't let the car attempt to back into a spa deemed too small—though of course it's not idio proof, and there'll be drivers who think they knc more than the computer and try tight spaces anywa There's no word on when this S60 might go into pr duction; in the meantime, city-dwellers will ju have to endure a few more dented fenders. When the sun's a-blazin', these are the jobs you wish you had.

SUMMER'S COOLEST JOBS

BY LIZA WEISSTUCH PHOTOGRAPHS BY SHANTI JAIN

It's as much a part of your daily routine as your morning coffee and commute: You sit at your desk, staring out the grimy window, and daydream that those rays of sunshine are hitting you directly. You begin to worry that you need sunblock (not to mention a margarita)—only to be interrupted by a phone call or an urgent e-mail from your boss. Your mind slips back to indoors mode. But while the office drones on, there are a lucky few whose careers let them indulge in New England's fleeting summer. When the heat is on, the work these people do is really cool.

Fane Googins prepares to jump into the pool.

Fane Googins, Rooftop Pool Attendant and Certified Lifeguard, the Colonnade Hotel

Fane Googins has seen professional athletes sunbathe and hotel guests who forget their swimming trunks get creative with boxer shorts or Victoria's Secret garments. The roof deck on the 12th floor of the Colonnade Hotel is a nano-version of Miami-esque style and sumptuousness, complete with a full bar, an abbreviated menu from Brasserie Jo (on the hotel's ground floor), a Crown surround stereo system, a killer view of Boston and, of course, a pool. While the traffic hurtles and pedestrians pound the pavement on the street far below, bathing beauties bronze their bods, imbibe mojitos and chill in a metropolitan paradise that feels time zones away from the urban blur.

In the midst of this urban oasis is Googins, who's there to ensure that swimmers are safe and loungers have full drinks and fresh lobster rolls. And although the Nantucket-style wooden fences that rim the roof are bright white and the sun reflects off the neighboring, mirrored building on Huntington Ave., there always seems to be a breeze at that altitude.

The pool is open to the public on weekdays (for a $25 entrance fee), and TV personalities and sports pros are among the locals who regularly drop by for a dip. There's a daily anticipation of who'll be spotted among the hotel guests, many of whom opt for lounging on the roof over sightseeing and shopping.

The scene is a far cry from Googins' previous job as a paralegal in Hawaii. Although she lived only five minutes from the beach outside Honolulu—and consequently got used to afternoon jogs on the shore and picked up surfing as a hobby—she had to spend most of each day holed up at a desk. So the freckled BC grad returned to Boston in April and became one of eight people selected (from a pool of 80 candidates) to spend Memorial Day through Labor Day up on the roof. It may not be a final destination, but for now she's one of the few in the city whose work is actually hospitable to the season's swelter.

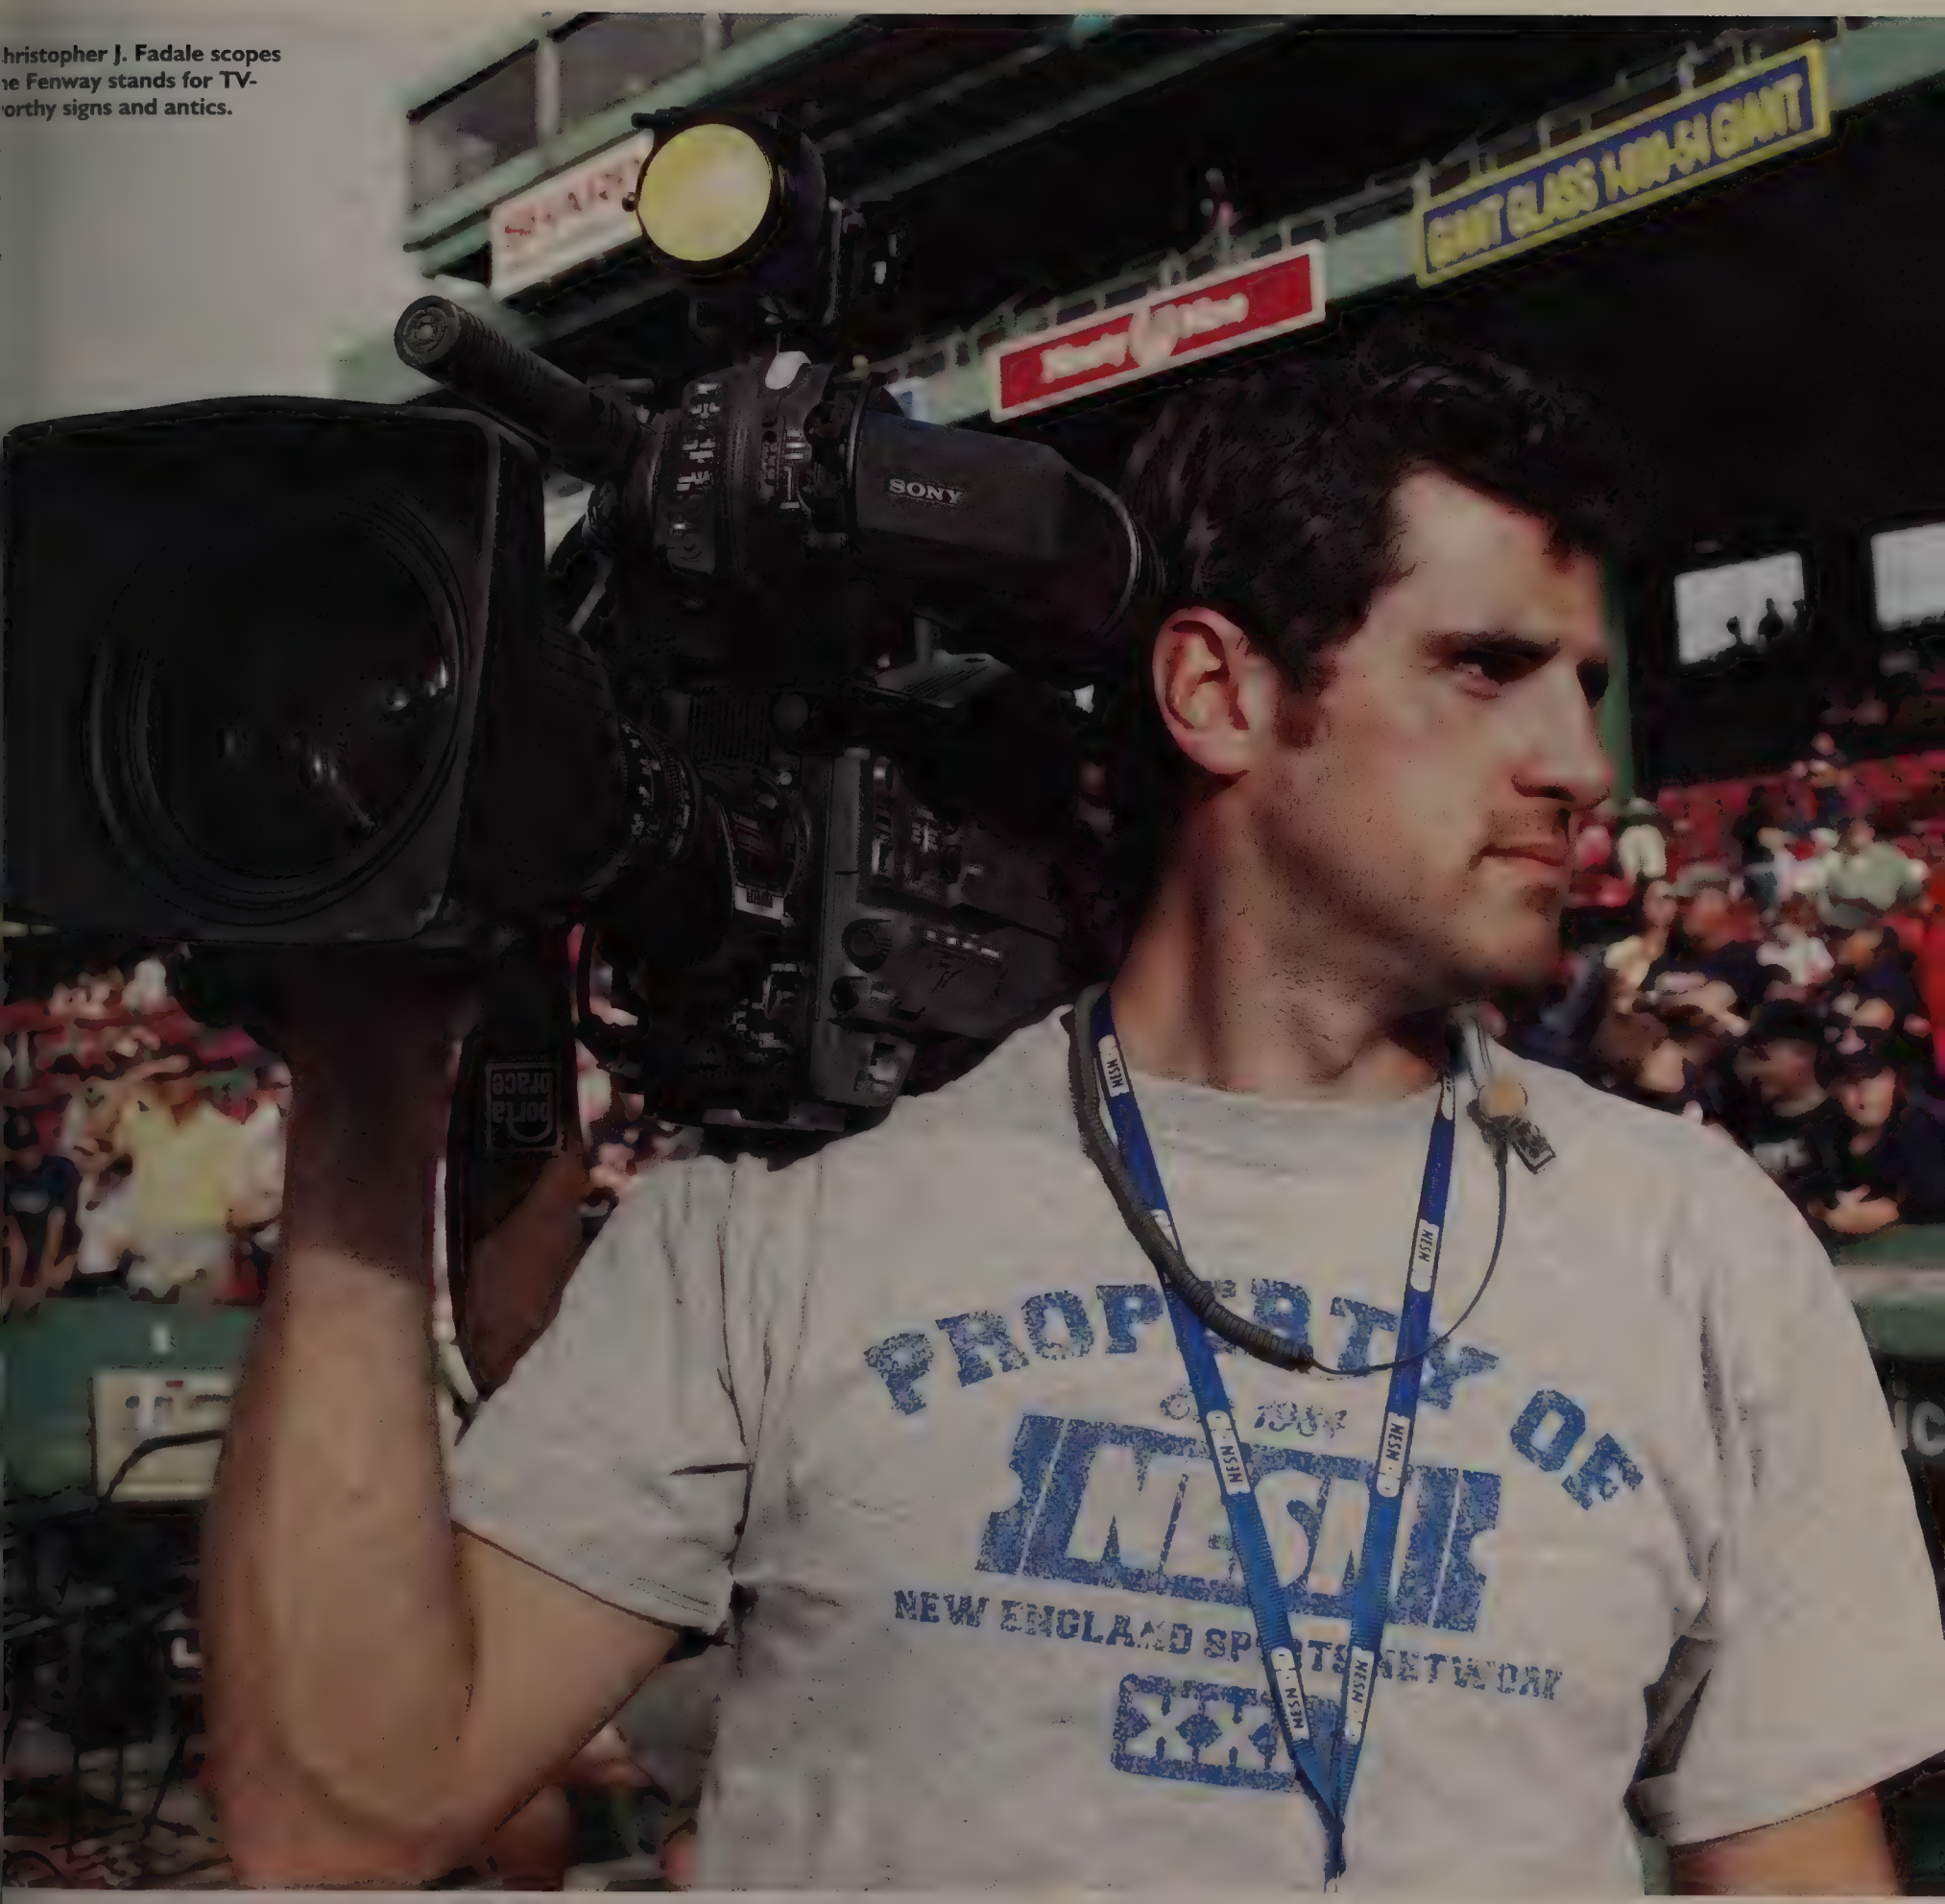
orthy signs and antics.



Christopher J. Fadale, Chief Photographer, NESN

hris Fadale refers to the nondescript door behind Section 28 in Fenway Park as "the oodfellas door." His key gives him access to the labyrinthine network that snakes back New England Sports Network's former headquarters, a treasure trove of cameras and bles, wheelies and wires (read: a techie's paradise).

His ID badge also gives him entry to the dugout, the Green Monster and the sleek edia lounge. Fadale is among the first to witness "Terry's Take," NESN's regular post-me exclusive with Terry Francona, from behind the camera. But cool as these insider oks are, the work involved is hardly a chilled-out affair. After all, Fadale is serving the voted Red Sox Nation, of which he counts himself a member.

Most of the time he's hauling his gear so he can catch fans' most clever banners bil-wing in the summer steam. (Remember the "Judas Damon" poster? That footage was dale's work.) And those snippets of sluggers assessing their game in press conferences, taking swings during batting practice, stretching on the grass and talking with NESN field reporter Tina Cervasio are all caught on film by Fadale and his camera crew of three. Footage then gets relayed from the camera to the NESN truck to the Watertown studio and onto your television screen. As fans flock into Fenway, Fadale captures players' appearances, stellar fan moments and scenic shots that catch his eye. About 90 percent of what he shoots appears on the air, and much of it is picked up by other stations.

"There's so much content happening all the time," says Fadale, who came to NESN from a network news station, which followed a stint working with acclaimed documentary filmmaker Errol Morris. He's taken that production experience and parlayed it into the original programming he orchestrates daily. While the 10 other NESN cameras posted throughout the park monitor the game, he's often out on Yawkey Way with his camera rolling, or dashing out to record something for those other teams the station covers—the Bruins, Celtics and Patriots.

Tara Pezzulo, Naturalist, New England Aquarium Whale Watch

Everyone asks Tara Pezzulo if she gets tired of seeing whale but for this 24-year-old naturalist, nothing can dampen th thrill of catching a nimble dive by Nile, a humpback whal who returns each year to the Atlantic waters beyond Bosto Harbor, or spotting a mom finback with her calf. Pezzul sheepishly admits that she gets a rush from what othe might deem the silly things whales do, but her interest i their behavior isn't surprising for someone with a degree i marine biology. She recalls, for instance, a calf name Wasabi, who engaged in dolphin-like play in the boat's wak for three consecutive days.

Many of us devise strategies for lowering our core tempera ture when the mercury rises, but that's pretty much a nonissu at sea with the cool breeze drifting off the water. Pezzulo an her conaturalist, Jeff Dunn, each spend time moseying abou the decks of the 113-foot boat, fielding questions from th whale watchers. The bulk of their two daily trips from Centra Wharf, though, is spent in the boat's wheelhouse scanning fo submerged creatures exhaling through their blow spout shooting up gusts of spray like translucent fireworks. Th wheelhouse is their equivalent of the announcers' perch at ballgame, the spot from which they monitor the action. Wit a mike in hand, Pezzulo darts from one end of the small cham ber to the other, reporting on the maritime activity and pro viding running commentary on each whale's dives, flippe slaps and breeches. She's part sportscaster, part auctioneer a she quickly directs observers to turn their heads at the ne sign of a whale, and admiringly notes the gargantuan crea tures' athletic grace as they leap out of the water.

"There's a good arch in that back," she says of a finbac on its way into the water to feed.

Jake Kiernan, Assistant Manager/ Head Bartender, the Landing at Long Wharf

Jake Kiernan once thought he'd spend the rest of his life in Las Vegas. He's sung on the Strip as well in the Hamptons, Clearwater Beach and New Orleans. And over the past 37 years, he's slung drinks in each of those cities, too. In fact, Kiernan is one of the few bartenders who can claim that he's performed everywhere he's bartended.

This year marks his third season slinging and singing at the Landing, where the summertime crowd around the bar can become five people deep. Kiernan has a burly physique but moves with astonishing grace as he bounds, scoops, spins and pours with athletic determination, shaking up margaritas, cracking open bottles of Corona, dishing out frozen concoctions and pouring the Landing's signature fish-bowl mixes. (He refers to these as the "four basic food groups.") He calls the cabana-esque bar on the harbor "my stage," and every few hours he picks up the mike, welcomes the crowd and breaks into song. It's almost like musical theater: You suspend your disbelief, especially when he dons glasses and a wig for an Elvis ditty.

"He sounds just like the song," says a befuddled customer on a recent Friday in July as Kiernan sustains the chanting of "The Lion Sleeps Tonight" with perfect pitch.

Kiernan carries a Vegas-style showmanship with him wherever he works. His docking at the Landing marks a homecoming, of sorts, as he works his way closer to his native New York.

"I love being down by the water, by the boats," he enthuses. "I wear shorts, a T-shirt and sneakers. I drive a Vespa to work, and being out here feels like a second childhood. I'm happy as a kid." IB

Jake Kiernan entertains customers with his voice while tending bar at the Landing.

THE STETHOSCOPE-HOLDER'S HEART THUMPS TOO

The Soul of A Doctor,* edited by Susan Pories, M.D., Sachin H. Jain and Gordon Harper, M.D., comprises thoughtful first-person essays by your future doctors.

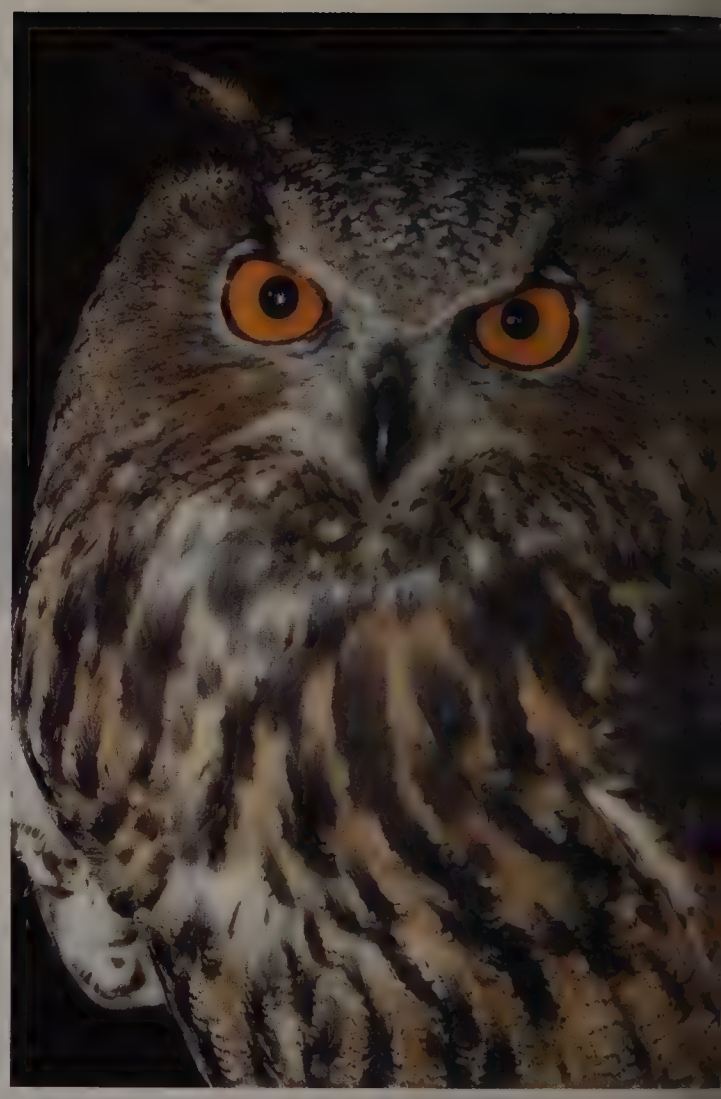
Before your doctor became labeled "M.D.," writing prescriptions and holding your mortal glass of water in his or her all-powerful hand, that person was like us. And during training, as essays in The Soul of A Doctor show, students are receptive, vulnerable and respectful of the enormous responsibility of their calling. These future doctors are aware that the deeply unconscious patient is someone they might know, and that the maladies they are treating are embedded in the larger picture of the patient's life and family, sensitively reporting their inner and outer negotiations. Yet Joe Wright realizes that "grand moral and spiritual questions" raised for new doctors are subject to routinization and speediness, too. They must continually balance skill and empathy "not with a hardened heart but with a heart opened to seeing with opened eyes," as Tracy Balboni writes. In one essay, the overlap of life, sickness and a shared love of the Game is played out, bonding patient and hospital staff during that momentous World Series, and briefly blurring sports-related baited-breath and actual oxygen saturation. They also deal with the absorbingly horrific: Joan Hsu describes masses of cancer "draped luxuriously like kings" in the abdomen.

THE CALL OF THE WILD, JUST OFF I-93

The Stone Zoo (781-438-5100) at 149 Pond St., Stoneham, in addition to many animals, has an interactive live free-flight show of huge birds—Lord of the Wings—through Labor Day. See www.zoonewengland.org for times.



Even the highway signs going toward the Stone Zoo ebulliently announce: Jaguar Cubs! This enclosed, wild, greenly overgrown zoo full of gigantic rocky areas that stretch mountainously upward, conceals and reveals its animals in their intimate environment. You respectfully greet, from afar, the rock-climbing cougar dangling his gigantic paws; the snow leopard with his long tail; the lynx (the exhibit features a plaster cast of his huge paw) and the skinny-legged, hungry dog–like wolf, all with their look of beautiful, imperial disdain. "The lion sleeps in the sun/Its nose is on its paws/It can kill a man," writes Wallace Stevens. Then, kissably close behind plexiglass, is Kanga, mama jaguar, wearing her extraordinary fashion fur no one will ever spray with paint, and three tumbling, darling cubs. A thrilling live show brings huge train birds, some of whom retrieve recycled tin cans on command, swooping into an outside theater, safe skimming inches from your head. Also on display: the American bald eagle looking like a jacket parson, vultures, colorful parrots, and the wise owl who can see a birthday candle four football fiel away. The lively commentator relates interesting information about flight, birds' ingenious ways ar ecological facts, as these winged beauties come closer to you than you could imagine.

EDIBLES ON THE EDGE

Gargoyles on the Square mixes it up in Somerville.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

On any given summer evening, Davis Square is hopping. An inviting array of restaurants, cafés, pubs and other purveyors of hospitality has grown up around this lively intersection of Highland, Elm, Holland and College streets and the T's Red Line, drawing patrons from nearby Tufts to the north, Cambridge to the south, and intrepid pioneers from farther south on the other side of the Charles. From this rich treasure trove of eateries and watering holes of various ethnicities, Gargoyles emerges as perhaps the most serious contender for dinner dollars.

Occupying a storefront on Elm Street a couple blocks southeast of the Square, Gargoyles is divided into a front room with a 12-seat bar and small tables seating another 15, and a larger interior dining room accommodating 60. A large wood-framed mirror dominates the front room, while amber light fixtures suspended from a high, black ceiling in the dining room are augmented by wall sconces with black lamp shades. In the dining room, original art by rotating local artists decorate the walls—a series of streetscapes in a striking study in streetlight illumination by Joseph D'Apice are on display. High-backed upholstered banquettes give the room an upscale ambience. Adorning the tables are crisp white tablecloths; substantial tableware including heavy-duty steak knifes; small vases with sprigs of mint picked from the mini-herb garden along the restaurant's front windows; and votive candles encased in small, mosaic-tiled chimneys.

Along with a stainless-steel basket of pleasantly crusty bread—tomato-accented on my visits—made in-house and accompanied by soft butter, our waiter brought large glasses of ice water and the restaurant's varied, but wieldy menu of seven appetizers and seven main courses. Like the rotating art on Gargoyle's walls, its menu also changes every few weeks. If it's among the selections, then Caesar salad ($7) would merit a voyage to this first-rate restaurant all by itself. This visual delight—a stunning combination of crisp hearts of Romaine lettuce in a mustardy dressing surmounted by two tempura-fried sage-spiced anchovies, a large triangular crouton of the house bread toasted and topped with luscious stewed tomatoes, onion, capers and peppers, and a whole hard-boiled egg standing on one end—left me speechless. From its eye-pleasing presentation to its range of contrasting flavors and textures, this extravagant tour de force of Gargoyle's talented chef, Jason Santos, merited its imperial moniker. Soft-shell crab ($12) combined a crisp-fried crab twisted into a vertical presentation atop a slice of grilled brioche with a dressing of wasabi-spiked aioli, nuggets of Smithfield ham and poached tomatoes. The sweet-salty ham, sweet-tart tomatoes and perky aioli created a perfect platform for the pleasantly fishy, crisp-fried crab.

While I enjoyed the multifaceted complexity of Santos' Caesar salad and soft-shell crab, I thought he pushed the culinary envelope a bit too far with his foie gras offering ($16). One would've thou that this notorious delicacy—its very e tence the result of an elaborate and e cally controversial method of proc tion—could've stood on its own: r buttery, at once savory and sweet. I classic case of gilding the lily, Gargo foie gras combined a plump lobe of sau liver with bacon and balsamic roasted (more sweetness, savoriness and saltin pickled parsley, and a bizarre saltine pu whose grainy texture and starchy salti turned out to be just what one would pect from a purée of saltine crackers. all discriminating diners know, someti more is less, and this was definitely on those times.

Another main course, the miso mustard salmon ($23), was an elabo combination of ingredients that was m successful. He started with a thick fille salmon, poached in a kombu (a specie kelp, often used in Japanese cook broth and garnished with grilled young paragus spears, wood-ear mushroo young carrots, Italian parsley and wh crunchy macadamia nuts. An additio garnish of spicy tuna rolls, lightly batte and tempura-fried, proceeded on a para track, sharing the Japanese accents of kombu broth. In sheer quantity and v ety of food on the plate, the dish was most over-the-top in a Todd English s of way. No complaint, here, howe since the tuna rolls, packed up to go, m a terrific lunch the next day.

Gargoyle's signature hoisin and hon glazed duck confit ($23) yielded the en hind section of a duck, two drumsticks tached to thighs, full-flavored and fork t der, served on a broad banana leaf w sticky rice, chopped mango, cashews a bean sprouts, a dizzying array of texture crunchy nuts, soft rice, velvety mango, silient bean sprouts—unified by a pervas but not cloying sweetness. One of the s pler main courses, grilled lamb porterho chops ($27), consisted of two thick l chops (their slight gaminess suggest Australian or New Zealand provenanc grilled to a medium-rare turn as orde While the meat was simple and straight ward, the garnishes were far from it. sauerkraut spaetzle combined noodles a cabbage to a delectable result, while z

Last, but not least, among the main irses, the steak and cheese–crusted cken breast ($18) turned out to be ally delicious. With a name and descrip-n that seemed like a self-caricature, se two large chicken breast halves work: The hash browns were soggy, as the starchy English muffin. In a wholly y, and the garnishes of bright-green fid-head ferns, spears of light-green flower-wild asparagus and tender white aspara-

, two slices of garlic mellow from s rendered the dish unforgettable.

Complexity didn't halt with the appetizand main courses. Gargoyles' desserts luded tonka bean panna cotta ($8), an tically flavored pudding that occupied tangular segments of caramelized bana, a "coffee soil" consisting of coffee, und chocolate and cocoa, and a garnish wo small strawberries and mint leaves. I nd myself scraping the bottom of the

late desserts (both $7.50) satisfied my perennial chocolate urge. Moist, delectable chocolate cheesecake arrived as a slice of a large cylinder presented on edge, accompanied by an interesting, sweet-tangy tangerine foam. Flowerless chocolate cake triply delighted: warm, moist, bittersweet chocolate cake, a scoop of surprisingly intensely flavored chocolate sorbet, and concentrated, deep, dark, profoundly chocolate sauce.

Gargoyles' modest but well-chosen wine list includes Two Hands cabernet sauvignon, a full-bodied, well-balanced Napa wine of the 2002 vintage, a remarkable value at $28 per bottle or $7 for a generously poured glass. A 2004 Renwood (California) barbera ($28) seemed closed when first uncorked, but it mellowed as it breathed, providing a pleasantly fruity, flowery accompaniment to the food.

I had the good fortune to have the same server on both of my visits to Gargoyles, the first when I dined alone in the front room, and the second when I was accompanied by my wife in the rear dining room. Attentive and efficient, he demonstrated an admirable knowledge of the food and preparations—no mean feat given the range and quantity of the ingredients—and was not reluctant to provide thoughtful and informed answers to our questions even on a busy Friday evening when the neighborhood was at its most animated. iB

Young Tomatoes n Lovage

Ruby Black, meet Green Zebra.

CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Frank McClelland, chef/owner of L'Espalier, is a low-key guy—one who chooses his words with the same reful deliberation his kitchen crew uses hen they select bags of fresh sorrel and cy cress from the back of a farmer's truck rked in front of the Back Bay restaurant. hen the topic is tomatoes, though, cClelland throws caution to the wind.

"There are a billion things you can do th tomatoes," he declares enthusiastily. Especially heirloom tomatoes, since he flavors are so developed—sweetness, nerals, low acid," he says. Although he's rticularly fond of the Ruby Black variety he yin and yang of sweet and acid"), he ys no favorites among the luscious sumr fruits starring in the first of a series of spalier Heirloom Tomato Wednesdays. e four-course dinner event matches nato-centric dishes—for example, heirm sunburst yellow tomato water with pped Chatham squid, pickled eggplant d lovage—with appropriate wines.

Although the rainy spring weather hasn't en conducive to growing the best toma-s—"It's a good year for mushrooms," he es—McClelland is counting on his purors to come through with the goods for first dinner, on July 19. August won't be roblem at all, and September will be a eze. The challenge, he says: "How can use 'em up before they go south on us?"

E'S GOT GAME

on King is just as handy with a hunting e as he is with a chef's knife. It's not that newly hired chef de cuisine at ltham's renowned Tuscan Grill "love[s] kill animals, but I like to eat what I nt." Whether he's bagged a deer or a ose, the Boston-born, city-raised King l gut it, butcher it and happily bring it ne to cook for friends.

Come fall, he says, he's looking forward to enu chock full of "venison, duck squab, d boar," some of which will certainly be t-roasted over a woodburning fire in the ll open kitchen. King's first menu, howr, is a summery overhaul of the "too rich, heavy" fare created by the previous chef. I talk to a lot of the regulars, and they e my food," he says. "They love that I'm lf] Italian. I was given my great-grandther's cookbook that came from Rome. all in Italian, and I sit and read it with Italian/English dictionary."

L'Espalier chef/owner Frank McClelland

King is focused on lightening prices as well as sauces. "Nobody wants to say it, but we're in a recession," he says. The priciest menu items are $24 each: rack of lamb with minted balsamic reduction, and garlic-rubbed veal cutlet with sweet tomato cream. Pastas range from $9 (a half-order) to $21 for frutti di mare in spicy tomato brodo with fettucine (highly recommended).

EXCELSIOR MADE ACCESSIBLE

Finally, the nifty downstairs bar at Excelsior is living up to its potential, thanks to chef Eric Brennan's new café menu and a sprinkling of outside tables. You won't need a fat wallet or an expense account, and there's even an extra bargain angle: All the "small plates" on the menu—including crispy crabmeat spring rolls, smoked salmon Rangoon, and Duxbury oysters—are priced at $7 until 7 pm. No need to rush for the early bird special: Even after 7 pm, you can order a fried halibut po' boy with shrimp remoulade on a house-made grilled anadama roll for $16, or a delectable, filling plate of Ozark Kurobuta pork schnitzel with smoked paprika, topped with a fried egg and served with braised red cabbage, for just $18. Even the wine is a deal: Wine director Dan O'Brien has assembled a list of seven reds and six whites each priced between $20 and $35. IB

WINE

Dessert Wine, or Whatever You Call It

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

So-called "dessert wine" is an indulgence that few of us allow ourselves, regardless of our cravings for something sugary at the end of a long, satisfying meal. The category is widely misunderstood—perhaps because we have lingering images of mass-produced Liebfraumilch or Boone's Farm to prevent any but the most adventurous from exploring it. Unfortunately, many of us still assume "sweet" wines must be cloying (and therefore unsophisticated). Because wines with some sweetness make up such an enormously diverse category, though, with a vast range of flavor, color, regional and stylistic variation once we get beyond the sugar, there's probably too much information for most people to assimilate. On the other hand, virtually every California winery I've spoken to that produces a sweet wine reports it among the most popular choices and the easiest to sell inside the tasting room. This is always confirmed when I do blind tastings with large groups: Most people like the sweet wines best.

Maybe, then, the problem is with the name, not the wine. If "sweet" seems somehow uncool and "dessert" connotes lack of self-control, how about if we just call them yummy? Whatever the nomenclature, wines with noticeably sweet flavors deserve to be better known, because once they're tried, so many people genuinely enjoy them. These after-dinner classics are consistently among the most underpriced and delicious products of the area in which they originate. Generally difficult and expensive to make, sweet wines are true regional specialties, many with histories that stretch back several hundred years. But as our center of wine gravity has shifted away from Europe, it's worth noting that Australia has also long produced a range of what they locally call "stickies." These run the full gamut of sweet wine styles: simple nectars where unfermented grape juice is added to dry wine; wines whose fermentation is arrested mid-stream through chilling and filtering out yeasts (most of which do not sparkle but some of which have varying levels of carbon dioxide); wines made from grapes that are left to raisin in the withering autumn sun until their sugars reach such high concentration that considerable sweetness remains even after fermentation; wines fortified with the addition of grape spirit, in the manner of port or sherry; and wines made through the magical transformation wrought by a mold called Botrytis (pronounc "boe-TRY-tiss"). This latter process, often referred to as "noble rot," occurs naturally i few of the world's vineyard areas. Near-perf autumn weather is crucial, harvesters can on pick grape bunches which the mold has infected to the right degree, and the thick, concentrated juice that results from pressing must be babied all the way through its fermentation and barrel agin

Of all the grapes susceptible to noble rot, sémillon is the variety with which t Australians have had the most success. L a grape that labors mostly in obscurity with everything going against it: an unpronounceable name; a shy personali that is easily submerged by its more aggressive blending partner, sauvignon blanc; and a tendency, because of its thi skin and full clusters, to develop rot tha makes it a somewhat unreliable produc of dry wine in vineyard areas that are humid in autumn, such as its ancestral home, Bordeaux. This last trait, howeve makes it ideal as material for luscious sweet wine, such as the 2005 Peter Lehmann Botrytis Sémillon from Australia's Barossa Valley.

If you want to try an outstanding example Aussie dessert wine ($18 for a half-bottle), th Lehmann is a steal. Rich and honeyed in arom with a mélange of dried-fig and tropical-fruit sensations (pineapple, mango and apricot), th flavors are long and luscious. The key with a wine like this is balance. Pure sugar, without enough acidity or other flavors, will make a w taste flat and sappy. But this sémillon, produce from riverbank vineyards, has plenty of refreshing zesty fruit and spicy, vanilla, slightly bitter tones in the finish that round off the sweetness. The first time I tried it, over 20 ye ago, it made an immediate impression. At tha point I drank a glass with a pear tart, and then few days later with some ripe blue cheese an grapes. (You can open the half bottle, pour a f ounces and then refrigerate it for up to a wee But the fact is, you might actually want to try with dinner—in the privacy of your own hom that is. Lobster is delicious with wine like the Lehmann Botrytis Sémillon. True confession: I once had it with a hot dog. OK, so it was a re good, organic hot dog from Whole Foods tha slathered with Dijon mustard, and yes, it's tru it was actually two hot dogs—maybe three. B the meal was sensational!

SAT./AUG. 5

Music: Battle Grounds

On Aug. 5, the biggest names in the local hip-hop scene converge on the Middle East, where one lucky MC will walk away with the rights to an album's worth of beats created by some the country's top producers. The event, dubbed The #1 Spot, is hosted by local MC Termanology (who was just profiled in the latest issue of XXL) and features 16 up-and-coming rappers who go head-to-head in a no-holds-barred rap battle (think 8 Mile, only without Brittany Murphy's annoying voice). The winning rapper, as proclaimed by local heavyhitters like 7L & Esoteric (who are prepping for a big show at the Berklee Performance Center next month), the Skitzofreniks and Big Shug, takes home the rights to an entire album's worth of beats, which is valued at about $20,000. The night also features performances by Termanology, Ballcklub and Lee Wilson among others. 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-931-2000). www.mideastclub.com. 8 pm. $18–$20. —RL

SUN.-FRI./AUG. 13–25

Tastings: Meal Deals

The tables are set for Boston's sixth annual Summer Restaurant Week, and lucky for hungry Bostonians, this year's fun is extended to run for two weeks instead of the usual one. From Aug. 13–25 (excluding Saturday, Aug. 19), more than 125 local restaurants are offering three-course lunches for $20.06 and three-course dinners for $30.06. Some of the items you'll have to look forward to are a dinner at Rialto featuring dishes like white bean soup, potato and farro ravioli, and seared salmon; lunch at Tremont 647 featuring crawfish mac 'n' cheese, cheddar cheese burgers and chocolate pudding cake; and dinner at Brasserie Jo featuring arugula salad, duck ballotine, veal porterhouse and herbed halibut. A full list of participating restaurants is available online. www.bostonusa.com/restaurantweek. —RL

Books: The Latest From Lehane

Musicians and comedians can release a greatest-hits compilation at the drop of a hat, but for a writer of Dennis Lehane's stature, it's not so easy—once you consider that most of his "hits" run upward of 400 pages. But this summer, Lehane's done the next best thing, which is to compile some of the best short stories he's published over the years and release them together Aug. 8 under the title Coronado. The same night, Lehane is the featured reader at the Newtonville Books in the Attic Series. While a majority of the content is the older material, the title piece, "Coronado," is new. The two-act play revolves around the reunion of a father and his son, Bobby, recently released after four years in prison. When it becomes clear that the father's only interest in Bobby is in relation to hidden cash from a previous heist, typical Lehane-like drama ensues. *The Attic/Union Street Bar, 107 R Union St., Newton Centre (617-244-6619). www.newtonvillebooks.com. 7:30 pm. FRI./AUG. 11

Music: Night of the Singing Rappers

It's a tough call for the discriminating hip-hop fan Aug. 11. Avalon hosts the hype-drenched superduo Gnarls Barkley, while S.F. indie-rap icon Lyrics Born rocks the Paradise. Both shows are fronted by MCs just as likely to break into song mid-verse as drop a hot 16 bars of straight-up rap, and both represent a different face of hip-hop than the one usually seen on MTV. To be fair, Gnarls Barkley's new take on old soul has met with mainstream success, as their single "Crazy" cracks the charts open wider than the gap between Brad and Jen. Gnarls vocalist Cee-Lo Green's roots are in Southern rap and gospel, while Lyrics Born is a veteran of the Bay Area hip-hop scene, with rhymes that flow from spoken to sung in a unique MC style he calls "em-singing." Catchy, bouncy but appealingly rough around the edges, his live show lives up to its billing: Lyrics Born tours with a live band, not to mention a talented and vivacious backup singer named Joyo Velarde (aka Mrs. Lyrics Born). Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-931-2000). 7 pm. $30. Paradise Rock Club, 969 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-562-8800). 8 pm, $15. —LPK

Museums and Galleries: Won't You Be Their Neighbor

As part of its annual Neighborhood Nights series, the Isabella Stewart Gardener museum stays open Aug. 10 until 8 pm, giving nine-to-fivers the chance to swing by after work. The event includes live jazz in the outdoor garden by the Patrice Williamson Quartet, a guided tour of the museum and jewelry-making workshops, plus storytelling and a scavenger hunt for kids. Visitors can also see the current exhibition by Swedish artist Henrik Hakansson. It's a rare occasion for visitors to see the museum at night, but the best part of the event is that all admission fees are waived and the night's events are free. 280 The Fenway, Boston (617-566-1401). Free. —LPK

Sunshine State

The warm family comedy turns out to be an unexpected winner.

BY SEAN BURNS

Folks who tell you that "winning isn't everything, it's the only thing" will be in for a jolt when they see Little Miss Sunshine, a surprisingly trenchant and well-observed dysfunctional family comedy that was the breakout, big-deal smash at this past January's Sundance Film Festival.

The fact that a mainstream, star-studded crowd-pleaser like this one couldn't catch a break in Hollywood and needed to be financed independently gives an unsettling glimpse at just how far off the path movie executives have wandered when it comes to making comedies these days. Little Miss Sunshine is exactly the kind of picture the studios should be churning out on a regular basis: It's warm, accessible, and has a lot to say about our modern way of life.

Greg Kinnear stars as Richard Hoover, a flailing motivational speaker who just invested his family's savings in a last-ditch attempt to parlay his self-penned, self-help nine-steps program into Dr. Phil fame. His wife Sheryl, played with terrific understatement by Toni Collette, is quickly running out of patience. She's justifiably distracted by the unexpected presence of her gloomy brother Frank (a deadpan-perfect Steve Carell), who has just been discharged from a local psychiatric hospital into the Hoover family's care, after a botched suicide attempt.

Son Dwayne (Paul Dano) is also a handful. Having recently discovered Nietzche, the sullen teenager has taken a vow of silence, communicating with his family only through written notes. Grandpa's also living at the Hoover house again, after getting kicked out of his retirement community for snorting heroin. Alan Arkin (an actor who should already be classified as a national treasure) invests what should've been a stock dirty-old-man role with unexpected depths of feeling.

The only member of the family who's not coming apart at the seams is seven-year-old Olive (Abagail Breslin), a chunky, disarming kid with glasses who just improbably landed a chance to compete in the annual Little Miss Sunshine beauty pageant, all the way out in Redondo Beach, Calif.

So on the verge of both bankruptcy and tearing each other's throats out, the Hoover family thus piles into their broken-down hunk-of-junk VW bus and hits the highway. It's a long road from Albuquerque to L.A., and an even longer road toward mutual understanding and acceptance—the kind of journey that isn't quite covered in Richard's nine-steps manual.

First-time screenwriter Michael Arndt follows a somewhat predictable arc. (You'd have to be crazy to think the film is going to end with the Hoovers all still hating each other.) But he's got a lot of surprises for us along the way, chief among them a harsh critique of the illusory, in some cases quite silly, standards for success we set for ourselves in American life, and all the terrible ways we tend to make ourselves crazy when we inevitably fall short.

Olive's yearning for beauty pageant glory and Dwayne's Zarathustra ideals are only slightly exaggerated versions of their elders' wayward pipe dreams. Richard's frantic need to follow his "never give up" philosophy rulebook at all times has turned him into an argumentative dullard, and—in the film's most biting example of needing to be the biggest fish, however small the pond—we discover that Frank spiraled into depression upon learning that he was only the country's second foremost Proust scholar, not the first. (Although, to be fair, the poor guy did just recently lose both his boyfriend and a MacArthur genius grant to the nation's actual No. 1 Proust scholar, so his despair is sort of understandable.)

Directors Jonathan Dayton and Valerie Faris downplay the script's zanier elements, keeping even the broadest laughs grounded at all times in a recognizable, workaday reality. Shot in the extrawide CinemaScope aspect ratio, Little Miss Sunshine boasts offhandedly elegant compositions, making careful use of the frame. Comedies these days are so often slapdash affairs, it's downright heartening to see one that has been put together with such visual intelligence.

Kinnear has never been better, locating a core of decency deep inside his pushy blowhard. Thanks to The 40-Year Old Virgin and TV's The Office, Carell is in some sort of golden zone right now, and he finds exactly the right note of sad-sack motionlessness to turn Frank into a walking sight gag. Bill Murray is maybe the only other actor right now who can wring as many huge laughs out of sitting still and looking so forlorn.

The Sunshine Pageant itself is an exquisitely extended comic set-piece that metaphorically contrasts the grotesquerie of this sick, Jon-Benet-subculture with the Hoover family's gradual embrace of their own flaws and shortcomings: If this is what the "winners" are like, maybe being a loser isn't so bad after all.

With several tips of the hat to the early films of Michael Ritchie (his Smile and The Bad News Bears are obvious influences), Little Miss Sunshine salutes the folks who strive for excellence and, despite their best efforts, find themselves sort of just muddling through as best they can.

In other words, it's about all of us. IB

Brothers of the Head ★½
In their heartbreaking 2002 documentary Lost Mancha, filmmakers Keith Fulton and Louis chronicled one of the biggest disasters in recen history—the costly implosion of Terry Gill never-finished dream project, The Man Who Don Quixote. Fulton and Pepe's fictional follo Brothers of the Head, is a disaster all it's own. porting to be an assemblage of recently unear archival footage, the movie tells a VH1 Behind Music–like saga of two conjoined twins, plu from a desolate English fishing village and sky eted to punk rock stardom in the 1970s. Keep straight face throughout a punishingly too- running time, the screenplay (by Gilliam's wr partner Tony Grisoni and adapted from a short by Brian Adliss) throws in every shopworn, ju musician biopic cliché, but still somehow fo the "mock" part of "mockumentary." Cinemat pher Anthony Dod Mantle does a magnificen aging film stocks and retrofitting his shooting according to ancient fads, but still one can't wonder what's the point of this elaborate hoax only joke here seems to be on the audience. Cars ★★
A disappointment from Pixar Entertainment dios, the computer animation geniuses be Finding Nemo, The Incredibles and those incom ble Toy Story movies. Here focusing on an alte universe populated only by wide-eyed, anthr morphized automobiles, the company's typi sharp storytelling takes a back seat to easy pop ture references and some annoying panderi NASCAR nation. Owen Wilson lends his voi a cocky, hot-shot race car who ends up strand a small town just off Route 66. Not even the h welcome line-readings of Paul Newman's curi geonly Husdon Hornet can rescue the story overfamiliarity; it's a fairly direct lift from the Michael J. Fox comedy, Doc Hollywood. More prising than the sluggish pace is an almost plete absence of the throwaway details and tured shadings we've come to take for granted Pixar film. Even the supporting roles are m one-joke celebrity cameos (George Carlin is pie VW minibus, Jay Leno appears as "Jay Lin The animation however, is often quite stunn (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Clerks II ★★
A strategic retreat to familiar ground for write rector Kevin Smith after the critical and com cial drubbing given to his maudlin, domestic d Jersey Girl, Clerks II is a broad and unconvin affair, lacking the grubby authenticity of its p cessor. The movie feels clueless and out of tc Picking up 10 years or so after the original, we cover Dante (Brian O'Halloran) and Randal Anderson) now stranded somewhere in their still working the same dead end jobs. After lays waste to the Quick Stop and its neighb video store, these two improbably find jobs flip burgers. The filmmaker is at a tricky career c roads, because for all the rampant toilet talk, C II is also chock full of the same corny family v speeches that characterized Jersey Girl. It bec painfully clear that Smith's no longer interest Star Wars chatter or dirty jokes, and the best t this once-promising talent could possibly do i Jay and Silent Bob to rest once and for all, then get the heck out of Jersey. Click ★½
Adam Sandler turns 40 this year, and Click the former rude-boy comedian slipping into same middle-aged, touchy-feely phantom that undid the movie careers of Robin Will and Billy Crystal. Egregiously sentimental, stars Sandler as a harried architect who hap upon a magical remote control that allows hi pause, mute and fast-forward through the trying times in his suburban life. What could been a simplistic comedy quickly veers in bizarrely masochistic death trip. The joke-free ond hour wrestles with divorce, cancer and tality in a spectacularly soppy, dramatically in petent fashion. Christopher Walken do shockingly poor imitation of himself as a mented guardian angel, while David Hasse confuses self-congratulation with self-parody cringe-worthy turn as Sandler's arrogant boss rector Frank Coraci previously helmed The ding Singer and The Waterboy, and he again plies the shoddy visuals, '80s pop songs wall-to-wall product placement that we've

(At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest ★★½

Bogged down by blockbuster elephantitis, this noisy, seemingly endless sequel to the surprise 2003 smash is more exhausting than exhilarating. Johnny Depp returns as the roguish, strangely fey Captain Jack Sparrow, again swishing and slurring and generally stealing any scene that isn't already nailed down. Problem is, everyone who had so much as one speaking line in the bloated original has come back for more, and screenwriters Ted Elliot and Terry Rosario are so busy laying the unwieldy expository groundwork for a massive, multi-film mythology (the next sequel is already in the can, ready for release next summer) that this one takes forever and a day to get rolling. A shame, as the swashbuckling scenes are delightful Rube Goldberg set pieces, reminiscent of Indiana Jones' funniest dustups. The special effects work is also first-rate, with the great character actor Bill Nighy working wonders as squid-faced, undead pirate Davy Jones. Producer Jerry Bruckheimer and director Gore Verbinski don't seem to understand that sometimes less is more. There's a charming 100-minute entertainment buried somewhere within these two-and-a-half fatiguing hours. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Prairie Home Companion ★★★½

Eighty-one-year-old maverick Robert Altman adapts Garrison Keillor's long-running public radio program into a sweetly comic meditation on loss and mortality. Within a loose narrative framework positing the show's final broadcast, Altman lets his roving camera meander and zoom with typical grace backstage at the Fitzgerald Theater. Keillor delivers a nicely self-deprecating blowhard variation of his on-air persona, while Meryl Streep and Lily Tomlin improvise up a storm as a squabbling sister act. (I could listen to these two talk over each other for hours.) Woody Harrelson and John Reilly score some yuks as thick-witted singing cowboys, Kevin Kline offers some erratic slapstick as a bumbling private eye, and even Lindsay Lohan gets in on the fun as Streep's pouty teenage daughter. But through it all, the angel of death (Virginia Madsen) hovers in the wings. A small movie about big subjects, A Prairie Home Companion sneaks up on you with its unsentimental assertion that all good things must come to an end, even a film as wonderful as this one. (At Harvard Square and suburbs.)

A Scanner Darkly ★★

Best known for roaming, pleasantly chatty indies like Slacker and Before Sunset, writer-director Richard Linklater takes on legendary science fiction writer Philip K. Dick's 1977 dystopian drug addiction parable, using the same interpolated rotoscoping animation techniques he pioneered in his 2001 film Waking Life. For all intents and purposes "painting" over previously shot footage of his actors, Linklater creates a wavy, shimmering aesthetic that here takes surprisingly little advantage of the format's visual possibilities. Keanu Reeves stars as an undercover cop who slowly drifts into dope-addled dementia while investigating a gang of innocuous-seeming suburban layabouts, played by Robert Downey Jr., Woody Harrelson and Winona Ryder. Linklater's characteristically low-key, unobtrusive vibe is a poor fit for Dick's clammy paranoia. Whenever it should be ratcheting up the tension, A Scanner Darkly merely wanders in a daze from one stoned encounter to another, giving disappointingly short shrift to the source material's warnings about our vanishing civil liberties. It's an unexpectedly dull, talky film. (At Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Superman Returns ★★★½

Boldly emotional and stubbornly old-fashioned, director Bryan Singer's valentine to the Man of Steel punches your nostalgia buttons from the get-go, incorporating not only John Williams' familiar triumphant theme music, but also select snippets of Marlon Brando's 1978 performance as Jor-El. Newcomer Brandon Routh capably steps into Christopher Reeve's blue tights, here returning to Metropolis after a five-year interstellar hiatus to once again fight for truth, justice and the American way. Superman comes back to find a changed world that has seemingly passed him by, and the movie's nifty, unspoken subtext actively questions whether our cynical era still has any use for such a forthright, true-blue hero. Singer's answer is a resounding yes, and despite some state-of-the-art computer-generated special effects, the film still feels like the product of a sweeter, gentler movie-making era. Without a trace of postmodern irony, Superman Returns champions the virtues of nobility, decency and sacrifice. The movie is packed with grandiose, larger-than-life images that sweep you along with their iconic forcefulness. It's good to have him back. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Talledega Nights: The Ballad of Ricky Bobby ★★½

However you felt about Will Ferrell's cheerfully incoherent Anchorman: The Legend of Ron Burgundy will probably hold true for this virtual re-make. With NASCAR racing standing in for news-casting, Ferrell stars once more as a dimwitted, headstrong superstar brought down a peg or two by a more talented rival who challenges his straight white male delusions of entitlement. But instead of Christina Applegate's anchor-lady, Ferrell's cuddly lummox here faces off against a French homosexual Formula One racer, outrageously played by Sascha Baron Cohen (TV's Ali G, and star of the upcoming Borat.) When it's really cooking, the movie has a field day tweaking Red State pieties, satirizing our NASCAR nation as a flag-waving hotbed of product placement and religious intolerance. But Ferrell is a performer who requires a short leash, and his regular collaborator Adam McKay feels more like an enabler than a director. The wildly inconsistent tone spins out in every direction imaginable for the sake of a gag. Sharper focus and a little discipline could have brought this one over the finish line. (At Boston Common, Fenway, and in the suburbs.)

You, Me and Dupree ★★

This slack, rudderless comedy begins dreadfully, but recovers slightly in the second half, when it abruptly floats away on the blithe comic riffs of star Owen Wilson. As a lazy couch-surfer inadvertently wrecking the marriage of his newlywed pals Matt Dillon and Kate Husdon, Wilson makes for a lousy bad guy. His drawling stoner line readings are altogether too endearing and sincere for the Jack Black-ish role of an overgrown adolescent Hell-raiser. Dillon is even more miscast, doing a bad Ben Stiller impression as an uptight, sputtering yuppie worn down to his last nerve. Perhaps directors Joe and Anthony Russo sensed something was amiss, as suddenly all character continuity flies out the window and the film tries turning Wilson's blissed-out layabout into an unlikely hero. It's a bizarre and illogical choice, but still a good deal more agreeable than where the picture originally seemed headed. Along this bumpy road, there's some fine supporting work from The 40-Year Old Virgin's scene-stealer Seth Rogen and a weird, seriously unfunny turn from Michael Douglas as Dillon's psychotic father-in-law. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shoot for the Moon

Sonya Kitchell's abilities and aspirations far transcend her tender age.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

"I might go crazy if this lasts any longer," Sonya Kitchell sings in "Let Me Go," the lead track of her sultry debut album Words Came Back To Me. But lines like "I'm dying to be out on my own" and "You've got to let me make mistakes" suggest something different from a romantic relationship.

Massachusetts native Sonya Kitchell brings her sultry folk sound back to the Northeast.

Yes, the song is about her parents. "When I first started playing it, I felt like it was giving away the fact that I'm a teenager, and I want people first and foremost to embrace me as a musician," says the 17-year-old Kitchell. "I wrote it hoping it was about any kind of relationship."

Apart from a few lyrical hints, however, not only could that song fit an adult dilemma, but unknowing listeners would never guess Kitchell's age from her jazzy folk-pop.

"A good song is a song that anyone can relate to," says Kitchell, whose sophisticated sound brings to mind such artists as Phoebe Snow, Suzanne Vega and her idol, Joni Mitchell. "It's like an abstract painting, in that you look at it and see what you want or need to see in it.

"Then there are other songs which are emotional and about loss and joy and love and pain, and every human being has pretty much experienced all of those things," she says. "No matter what age you are, you can relate to [them] because the feelings and emotions are universal."

Those universal expressions have taken Kitchell from her parents' Western Massachusetts farm to nationwide concerts, from a Joni Mitchell tribute at Carnegie Hall to the Dunkin' Donuts Newport Folk Festival, where she will appear Aug. 5.

"The whole year is just a blur," says Kitchell, who's also scheduled to play a free WBOS concert Aug. 10 in Copley Square Park. "I was pretty much determined to be a professional musician since I was 7 years old. It's always been what I wanted to do, and somehow it's worked out."

Kitchell got an early start, encouraged by her abstract-painter father and graphic-designer mother. "There was always music playing, and they took me to lots of concerts and places that I now play," says the singer, who still enjoys walking through the woods of her family's 40-acre property in Ashfield. "I'll go home every couple of weeks for a day or so, and it's more likely that I'll write something than not, because it's a reflection time."

By age 10, she was studying voice with jazz masters Sheila Jordan and Rebecca Parris. "I was fortunate in that almost everyone I've met, because I've been so young, wanted to teach me," says Kitchell. She recalls of one workshop with Jordan, "There were 16 other singers, and she took me to her car after the class and made me sing 'How High the Moon' over and over again until I got it perfect. I don't think people would have done that with me if I was older."

In addition to her early jazz obsession, she soaked in the records of parents, taking particular interest in Mitchell, the Beatles, Randy Newman, Nina Simone and Marvin Gaye.

"That's kinda still what I listen to, except now I meet a lot of new artists and check them out," she says from a Chicago tour stop. "But it's different. You don't worship them in the same way you worship people you've never met and just listened to all their music."

Now Kitchell, who began recording Words Came Back To Me at age 15, is setting her sights on her next disc. "It's going to get more rock and roll," says the singer, who has also become a big fan of blues-punk siren PJ Harvey and just got invited to play the 2007 Bonnaroo festival. "I hope it goes in that direction. I still love to write the simple, sparse songs too, so I'll have to figure out a way to do it all."

For goals and role models, she says, "I have to admit that the people that I admire most are people like Paul Simon, Bob Dylan, Paul McCartney and Joni Mitchell. That's the moon I'm shooting for. Who knows if I'll even get halfway there, but I definitely have far-off goals and high hopes, and I'd like to do everything that I possibly can."

Time, at least, is on Kitchell's side—though it can fly by, as in her song "Train," a seeming metaphor for speed.

"That song is more about the industry actually, and just being both excited and terribly frightened by it at the same time," she says. "Life in general is always very thrilling and a little scary. You want things to happen more and you want them to slow down a little bit." iB

IMMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Say "Yes!"

N.P., I first saw you more than three years ago when you walked into the Star Tavern. Even if it wasn't an arranged meeting, your twinkling eyes and beautiful smile would've made me stop over to say hello. Since then, our lives have been filled with all the best that Boston has to offer (with the IMPROPER's help, of course). You've already said yes, but it wouldn't be official until it happened on the pages of the Impersonals. Will you make me the happiest guy in Boston and marry me?

is is for the guy I see on the 12:30 commuter train on the Franklin e going to Boston. Do you know w stupid you look fussing with ur hair for 20 minutes before tting off the train at South tion? YOU'RE A GUY. You are rse than any woman I know with g hair. I'm willing to give neone $20 just to mess up your r before you leave the train. Get er yourself.

Hairless in a Hurry

o, We Ain't Gonna ke It

th 45 people living together, a dirty use would be implied. However, with ost half of the residents being frat s under 23, I'd expect at least one to help a girl when the fifth floor sh bag weighs ¼ of her weight or en her window crashes to the floor ause duct tape actually won't hold ss to the wall. But no, instead, you ow a party, leaving red solo cups l empty cans littering the alcohol-ked floor for days until the stench of le beer becomes unbearable. At this nt, there are probably more flies in kitchen than there is food. From on, the girls who are working ee jobs just to pay their rent aren't ning anymore. If you want to pass inspection so your frat can have somewhere to party next year, that's up to you.

—Fiery Females

Backseat Drivers

To the Greyhound driver on the four o'clock bus from the Big Apple to Beantown on July 16, we all have problems, but your behavior is making me reconsider my opposition to the Chinatown bus franchise! If vocally thrashing out on a bus full of overheated and abnormally quiet passengers is not enough, why did you scream "No cell phones!" before we even sat our tushes down? Hypocritically, you then proceeded to gab in Turkish or Georgian (my friend and I debated) on your Motorola for 20 minutes in rural Connecticut.

And what the hell was up with threatening to leave us at the rest stop for stepping out to relieve you of our paid-for company for a moment? I understand if you were in a bad mood, overheated, or upset over American imperialism, or even bitchy cell phone talkers. It happens to the best of us. But it ain't the fault of the weary traveler. It was one thing if the bus were full of noisy screamers and loud gabbers, but your passengers, including myself, just wanted to watch Spanglish, sleep and expedite our lovely time together while getting back to Boston. Oh, and one more thing, blowing that horn for five minutes straight isn't going to make things right for you. It's only going to break our eardrums.

—Wearied Travellers

Mighty Low Manor

To our former Cambridge landlords, A big f--- you. We're so sorry that we found a larger apartment one block away for $350 a month less than you were ripping us off for. That's no reason for you to turn from sweet, dreadlocked hippie landlord to psychotic, erratic tyrant. It was unnecessarily cruel to deny our subletter air conditioning all summer and to threaten to throw our things out as soon as midnight strikes on our lease. Besides the sheer stupidity of threatening good tenants who haven't given you a security deposit, it's illegal in Mass. to do a self-help evict without going through the courts. Be thankful that we decided not to have that mud party on July 31 or to tell the rest of the building how crazy, manipulative and greedy you are.

—Peace Out

Rude Line to Alewife

To the tall man in the khakis exiting the last car at Central Square of the Alewife-bound Red Line, perhaps you thought I was entering the car before everyone got out. If you had taken a second to consider it, you'd have realized I had been on the train all along and was trying to stay on it to avoid being stampeded by the commuters trapped on the crowded car who were attempting to exit. Regardless of what you thought, there is never a reason for a stranger to push another stranger, especially for a man about six-feet tall to push a woman who's only five feet. Your actions proved you to be a coward. Since you pushed me into a woman standing behind me, who thankfully kept me from falling, and since it was so aggressive and uncalled for, I didn't have time to react. Had I had time, I'd have hit you squarely in the face with the container of food I was carrying home for dinner. You should be forced to crawl on the street like the rat that you are. Shame on you.

rockie horoscope

AUGUST 2 – 15, 2006

EO JULY 23–AUGUST 22

hy is this year different from others? What does fate have in store for Leos born in the first 10 ys of August? Some of you will be asked to expand your sphere of influence no matter what it sts, when your sun ruler is provoked by growth-oriented Jupiter. Others will find a reason to se up shop and deal with a pressing personal matter during Sol's merger with Saturn. And ns who've been dazzled or deluded by a significant relationship could achieve clarity once e full moon in your Aquarius marriage house sheds light on that situation.

IRGO

UGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

lleagues or fellow club members can exert greater influence er your Mercury ruler comes out of retrograde. If a matter ecting the group has been tabled during July, look for its olution around mid-August. Assuming that at least for now ur partner agrees with the consensus of opinions, having lsy Mars in your sign might make you seem feistier than ual. Perhaps you're gearing up to fight for a project whose owth-potential seems truly tremendous. Now would be a od time—next season or next year could be too late.

IBRA

EPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

one expects to get a raise when he or she is coping with summer heat and taking it easy. Nonetheless, nscientious Libras who care about their jobs and their sses could be rewarded while generous Jupiter in your rpio money house captures the attention of the monstrative Leo sun. Since productive Saturn is part of s mix, additional responsibilities will follow. Incidentally, ou can transcend the purely personal benefit and nsider the social or cultural implications, this would be a od time to put your idea for a better future forward.

CORPIO

CTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

ew things to juggle: first off, affectionate Venus comes onto e of the offbeat characters hanging around your Pisces house romance and other pleasurable pastimes. Second, fortuitous piter in Scorpio is being challenged by the Leo sun to chase er a lifetime goal, no matter the degree of difficulty. Third, ir action-packed Mars coruler is on board and until Labor y will provide the energy and courage to achieve that aim. t if you don't have confidence in your skills or are content to on Lady Luck, so be it.

AGITTARIUS

ready for an unexpected spurt of activity, as energetic rs in your Virgo house of career achievement and mmunity involvement comes up with an opportunity to ke an all-out effort. Particularly when Mars favors your repreneurial Jupiter ruler around Aug. 8. But first you'll e to decide just how far you'll extend yourself financially en the extravagant Leo sun tests Jupiter's (and your) dency to go overboard. Remember, this is not a pissing test, so if sobering Saturn offers to protect you from rself, take it.

APRICORN

must be doing something right. Confirmation of this ple fact should show up about the time the powerful sun eo merges with your Saturn ruler on Aug. 7. A higher thority than your partner (the IRS?) could be offering the ification you've been waiting for. Your patience can also rewarded after gadfly Mercury in your Cancer plement turns direct and begins to finalize a matter t's been on your mind since the end of June. Maybe ger. You've got a good thing going, keep it up.

QUARIUS

NUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

d out the résumé. Now that Mercury is moving forward in r house of work and other obligations, you have a better nce of landing a job or tackling an assignment that's both otionally nurturing and financially rewarding. Whether it would also feed your ego is a question best left to an efficient coworker or your life-partner. Around the Aquarius full moon, as the radiant sun and tradition-bound Saturn join forces in "I am the King!" Leo, consider yourself lucky if they allow you to reflect their glory, let alone shine on your own.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Traditionalists might not be thrilled, but Fish who crave something new or unusual should respond with glee to the overtures romantic Venus made this weekend to inventive Uranus in your sign. Didn't notice anything special? Perhaps your birthday falls too close to the cusps that surround your sign. Or are you already contemplating an investment opportunity that no-nonsense Mars in your Virgo partnership sign is laying out on the dining room table? Consider it carefully; it could be that big of a deal.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Now that Mercury is moving forward again, think about taking steps to resolve the household or family matter that has held you in limbo waiting for the other shoe to drop, throughout July. You could also wait to see how things work without your input. Meanwhile, to protect and preserve your recent accomplishment, leap like the agile Ram you are over an obstacle or unexpected delay that may get in your way while the Leo sun and by-the-rulebook Saturn conjunct around Aug. 7. Forego immediate satisfaction, and remind yourself of your long-range goal.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

If you don't believe that "patience is the key to heaven," step back and watch what happens as the Leo sun and slow-poke Saturn join forces to rearrange the favors you've recently received. This could be a tough interlude for Bulls because of contraindications. Your pleasure-loving Venus ruler encourages taking the line of least resistance, while the life-sustaining Leo sun advocates caution. Plus, a well-meaning partner may promise more than he or she will deliver when the time for action arrives. And what about your somewhat dubious reputation?

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Who, besides the Lord, giveth with one hand and taketh away with the other? That's the situation you could find yourself in during the next few weeks. Try to remain tentative about present-day negotiations until you see what the relentless Leo sun hath wrought. Plus, you may need to adjust to your Mercury ruler's change of direction and assimilate the info it revealed while it was retrograde. What about having fun in the summer sun? Not so much this year, not while Mars in nit-picking Virgo threatens the very foundation of your happy home. Earthquake insurance?

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

The idea of a quirky romance could be most in your thoughts. Having affectionate, flirtatious Venus in your sign is nothing if not fascinating. Mercury turning direct in Cancer also emphasizes the power of the mental process. However, financial matters can overshadow every other question while the sun in your Leo money house wavers between optimism and pessimism, urging you first to be generous, then Scrooge-like. The full moon on Aug. 9 should bring money issues to a head—the cock-eyed romantic notions soon follow.

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late-20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation. 65 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table—located in a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral—must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five-years.

EMILY POST WOULD BE PROUD...

Roses are red,
Violets are blue,
It's a benefit for ParkArts,
And the guests wear hats, too.

Inside a yew hedge in the Fenway is one of Boston's most underappreciated public spaces—the Kelleher Rose Garden—where first lady Angela Menino hosts one of the most picturesque get-togethers of the summer: The Rose Garden Party.

Guests wearing hats worthy of the royal enclosure at Ascot sip champagne and nibble shrimp while a string trio plays by the fountain, and everyone talks about their plans for the summer.

On-hand for the late-afternoon soirée: celebrity chef Lydia Shire, blonde cutie Lynn Dale, the perfectly lovely Bea Flammia-Burton, social lionesses Jane and Bea Roy with the latter's charming son, Chad Jackson, Isabella Stewart Gardner head honcha Anne Hawley, brunette bombshell Carolyn Rodeno, arts booster Bill Nigreen, caterer extraordinaire Holly Safford, the sibling duo of Ingrid and Ursula Liff, City Hall hipster Tony Nunziante, Old Town Trolley honcho Sean Ford, eternal ray of sunshine Dede Ketover, Milton socialites Peggy and Dick Dray, media bigwig Meg Albert, banking behemoth Carol Fulp, harbor mistress Vivien Li, and the judges of the hat contest: blonde-about-town Anna Cheshire Levitan, fashion plate Christie Matheson, and hat designers Marie Galvin and Kathleen McDermott.

The award for most creative hat went to Lydia Shire's fork and spoon festooned topper, prompting someone to joke, "That brings new meaning to the expression, 'I'll eat my hat.'"

However, top honors for most versatile outfit undoubtedly went to marketing and PR guru Harron Ellenson, who said, "I had to choose an outfit that was appropriate for both a garden party and the funeral I just came from, and let me tell you, it wasn't easy."

WHO SAYS ROMANCE IS DEAD?

One of the city's most patrician rites of passage, the Boston Cotillion to benefit the Vincent Memorial Hospital, took place in the grand ballroom of the Park Plaza Hotel, formally introducing this year's crop of debutantes to polite society.

Coming out—in the old-fashioned (as opposed to the homosexual) sense—were lovely young things Sarah Babcock, Emily Banks, Kendall Dacey, Emily Forse, Alexandra Gardiner, Serena Marston, Amanda McGuire, Katharine Morphy, Lucy Randall and Bennett Wilson. They all wore traditional white gowns, were escorted by a pair of appropriate young men and appeared on their father's arms to curtsy to the crowd before shaking hands with the receiving committee: a formidable group of grandes dames that included Shelagh Adams, Jane Marshall, Dola Stemberg, Gale Minot, Cokie Perry and Stephanie Warburg.

Eminence grise Michael Robbins served as the emcee, while the honoree was Dr. Arlan Fuller, and on-hand to clap politely were such Brahmins and bluebloods as Vincent board chair F. Gardner Jackson, department store heiress Hope Baker, Back Bay socialite Deborah Babson (as in the college), the impossibly debonair Thomas Handasyd Perkins Whitney and his babe-alicious wife, Vicky, her daughter, the smokingly hot Dr. Emily Doelger, escorted by entrepreneur Fedor Smith, Chestnut Hill doyenne Michelle Talbot and her oh-so-suave son, Teddy, etiquette expert Winston Jenkins, hairstylist-to-the-Old-Guard John McKenna, a woman of a certain age who said of one 20-something young man, "I'd marry him for his trust fund," and a man who said, "A roomful of 17-year-old girls in low-cut gowns—what could be better?"

However, the evening's most amusing remark came when one guest said to another, "You look great: tan, healthy, rested..." to which the woman replied, "Don't forget divorced. That'll do it every time."

FROM THE EDITOR

The IMPROPER turns 15 this month, and to celebrate we've put together an issue full of highlights from our humble beginnings as a 50-page newspaper to the 100-page glossy magazine we are today.

Longtime columnist Jonathan Soroff shares stories about the upstart early days under founding publisher Mark Semonian, an eight-page photo spread pays homage to the Boston-bred celebs who've graced our pages over the years, and our "Then and Now" feature compares Boston in 1991 and 2006. And don't forget to tak our quiz, matching quotes from IMPROP interviews with the famous Bostonians who said them.

Much has changed since 1991—but we're still free, family-owned and utter independent. And, most important, still devoted to helping you have fun.

Thank you for reading. We hope you hang out with us for the next 15.

EDITED BY JOLYON HELTEMAN

Sashimi, Deluxe

Chef Ting San may have fumbled by naming his new South End sushi place after its Brookline sibling. Oishii Sushi's zealous fans—the raw-ficionados who blithely camp out for hours at the tiny Chestnut Hill spot hoping to snag one of just 13 seats (not a statistics major, clearly, among them)—are in for a shock if they're expecting a chain-style duplicate. Hyper-fresh fish aside, the two restaurants couldn't have less in common—starting with the sign, which Oishii Boston lacks altogether. "We're keeping it secret," Ting says. "Once the neighbors figure out we're here, they will come."

Those who find the place (as you retrace the path between Red Fez and Dunkin' Donuts, it's that frosted-glass door you keep ignoring) will note bigger differences. "You could fit the entire Brookline restaurant inside the foyer," Ting reckons, accurately enough. The foyer leads to a 20-seat lounge—serving wine, beer, and sake—and a dining room with seating for 80. One floor below are two additional seating areas, one reserved for patrons dining omakase (chef's tasting) style. Ting hopes the generous capacity creates an "unrushed" vibe, which he admits isn't the Brookline location's forte: "We created this place because we saw our customers in pain." A stark, minimalist interior of polished concrete and back-lit screens—so ruthlessly modern it makes the John Hancock look like a cluttered neo-Victorian—is softened only by the occasional shadow box displaying a bamboo plant or lotus blossom.

Oh, and there's food, too. Once again, Ting one-ups Brookline by jettisoning pedestrian items like Alaska rolls, caterpillar maki, and yellowtail-anything (only bluefin tuna here). If the South End is on the cusp of becoming the priciest dining scene in town, Oishii Boston may push it over the top. Specialty maki start at $11 (for a California roll that substitutes real crabmeat for "krab"), but most are in the $18–$25 range, as is the "Innovated Specialty Sashimi" menu, which pairs slices of raw fish with deluxe ingredients like osetra caviar, shaved truffles and fresh wasabi. Full-on entrées like pan-seared sea scallops with morels ($40), toro don (fatty-tuna slices served on sushi rice, $45) and grilled Kobe beef ($60) run considerably higher.

Ting says the steep prices stem not just from luxury cuts of fish and meat, but also from the cost of wrangling rare Japanese ingredients like menegi (baby onion sprouts) and kinome (peppercorn flowers)—items he's managed to procure only recently. "Once, you could see these ingredients only in L.A. or New York," Ting says. "Now you don't have to leave the South End." 1166 Washington St., Boston (617-482-8868). —JH

Tour de Farce?

Harvard seniors Jordan Jones and Daniel Schofield B were just trying to make a few bucks this summer w they started Hahvahd Tours, an irreverent alternativ the decidedly more placid campus tours the univer offers. A few extra bucks turned into several thous (through tips—the tour is free), but now the univer wants to shut down the students' act.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: How did you come up with idea for the tour?

Jordan Jones: Harvard's tour is short, not that inter ing and impersonal. Dan went on a tour at Oxford U versity, run by a private company, that was informa but fun, and that was our inspiration.

IB: Did you think it would be such a moneymaker?

JJ: We were hoping it would be profitable, but we no idea it would take off like this.

IB: What's Harvard's beef?

JJ: It's nothing to do with the tour. All our informatio accurate and gives accolades to the school. They going after us solely because we've affected their bu ness. Word is they've had to let people go who lead th tours because there aren't enough tourists taking them

IB: How many people per day attend your tours?

JJ: We have about 50 per tour on weekdays, and 80 120 on the weekends. And on average, five to six peo leave Harvard's tour in the middle and join ours.

IB: What part of the tour gets the most reaction?

JJ: The statue of John Harvard. Everybody on the offi tour rubs the statue's feet, which is supposed to be go luck. On our tour, we tell them why they should av touching John Harvard's feet at all costs—because H vard students have a long tradition of [urinating] on th after a night of drinking.

IB: What about the naked co-ed primal scream that tra tionally happens before finals?

JJ: On our tour, we reenact the event by asking eve one to scream at the top of their lungs in front of University Hall. Unfortunately, they keep their clothes on.

The hour-plus tour kicks off at 10 am, 12 and 2:15 pm every day in front of the Harvard T stop.

BEAUTY BUZZ

Hooked on Classics

Now that the new MAC store has finally opened its double glass doors on Newbury Street, we caught up with the company's New England makeup guru, James Robitaille, for a preview of the hottest looks for fall. The buzzword is classic, but, thankfully, classic comes in more than one form The first is a minimalist look, with a clean, contoured face and nude, monochromatic color (think Al McGraw in Love Story)—ultra-feminine and sure to be embraced by Boston beauties. The second look, featuring dark, winged eyes and red lips, is more dramatic but every bit as classic and inspired by Fellini's 1960 film, La Dolce Vita. While runway lip color was revved up and slightly smudged, Ro bitaille suggests a brick red Viva Glam Lipstick paired with a more neutral liner, like Spice, Strip Down or Cork (for darker skin tones). As for the eye element, try a thin line of Liquid Last, flipped up at the outside corner, and one coat of Zoom Lash Mascara. That approach gives you an edge ye still allows you to stroll comfortably down Newbury. Need color now? Play chemist at home with MAC Pigments, pots of pure color you can mix with Lip Glass to create your very own gloss. 11 Newbury St., Boston (617-267-0013) —Marni Elyse Katz

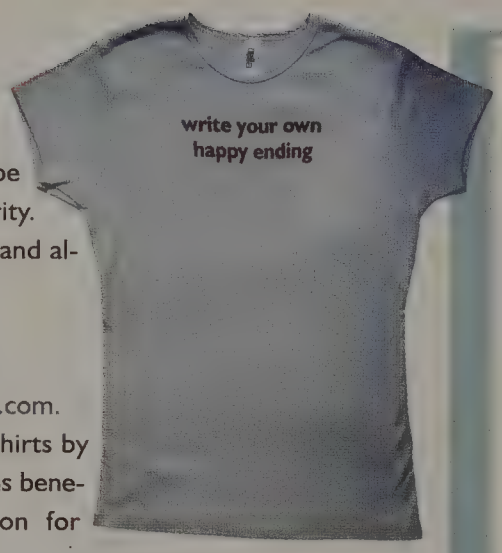
T-shirts for a Cause

Expanding your T-shirt wardrobe can also mean donating to charity. Here are the latest in stylish—and altruistic—T's.



Emotional Armor

Awakened Heart

$68, www.moosecakedesigns.com.

Sales of "Awakened Heart" T-shirts by Watertown's Moosecake Designs benefit the Doug Flutie Foundation for Autism.

Boston Cares

$15, www.bostoncares.org

T-shirts available from Boston Cares, a local nonprofit that organizes volunteer programs around town, benefit the organization itself, as well as more than 100 community-enhancing projects every month.

Emotional Armor

$28–$38, www.emotionalarmor.com

Not only will T-shirts adorned with phrases like "never underestimate me" and "write your own happy ending" bolster your self-esteem—they'll also help cultural enrichment programs for children and the Jeanne Geiger Crisis Center for domestic violence prevention.

Life Is Good Watermelon Festival

$15–$20, www.lifeisgood.com

More than 35,000 had a blast during last month's Life Is Good Watermelon Festival while raising money for Project Joy, which helps young victims of trauma. The watermelons were polished off in July, but the T-shirts are still available—and the proceeds still benefit the kids.

New Balance Lace Up for the Cure

TASTY TIDBITS

Om, Sweet Om

There's No Place Like... Om, the Asian-influenced eatery in Harvard Square, is doing its best to cure Greater Boston's collective case of the Monday blues. Every Monday, from 6–10 pm, chef Rachel Klein hosts Buddha Belly Mondays, when she offers a three-course prix-fixe meal with dishes from a particular region. The theme changes every month, so if you missed July's Asian Barbecue menu, don't fret. In August, Klein pays homage to the Japanese island of Okinawa, featuring dishes like asparagus tempura, pan-roasted wild striped bass with braised pork belly and pickled red cabbage, and Okinawa-style sweet potato ice cream. 92 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-576-2800). www.omrestaurant.com

Oodles of Noodles... Take a quick glance at the menu at Zenna Noodle Bar, a new restaurant that opened this summer in Coolidge Corner, and you might think you've stumbled upon the outline for a Feng Shui seminar. Chef-owner Tien Truong has separated her menu into four categories: Air (appetizers), Earth (salads), Fire (stir-fried noodles) and Water (noodle soups). As its name would suggest, Zenna's strength is its noodle dishes—try the Thai Noodle (pad thai) or Zenna Noodle (a soup inspired by traditional Vietnamese pho)—but Zenna offers options for noodle-phobes as well. Zenna Noodle Bar is open seven days a week for lunch and dinner. 1374 Beacon St., Brookline (617-566-0566). www.zennanoodlebar.com

Inside Sports... When you can't score tickets to Fenway or Yankee Stadium, head over to Bambara in Cambridge to take part in a Red Sox–Yankees rivalry of another kind. Chef Nathan Powers recently added two new drinks to the bar menu: the Green Monster ($10), a mixture of Ketel One Citroen, apple schnapps and fresh pear puree, garnished with a sliced bartlett pear; and the Yankeetini ($10), which features raspberry vodka, Godiva choco liqueur and bluebe syrup "pinstripes." restaurant is keeping a of which drink is ord the most, and the wi will be crowned at seas end. *25 Edwin H. ONE'S A CROWD

In which the saying "The more, the merrier" is shown to be generally correct

There are certain activities that require the company of others: seesawing, arm wrestling, harmonizing and trust falls, to name a few. Playing golf and going to the movies, however, don't require the presence of another person, yet I've never done either of those things by my lonesome. But why not? Why are my golf playing and movie watching subject to the whims of others? Am I so insecure that I think people will see me at the golf course or the movie theater and say, "Look at that lonesome loser! He must not have any friends! Let's punch him!" Yes, actually, I am that insecure.

But enough is enough. I throw my clubs in the car and head to the Franklin Park golf course to confront my fears. I'm going to play as a single. And when I'm done, I'm going to see Miami Vice, all by myself. I hope I enjoy my company.

When you're golfing by yourself, you're not truly alone—you're consigning yourself to play with strangers. I stroll to the first tee and the starter motions me to join three guys teeing off, who introduce themselves as Robbie, Doug and Fred.

My first gaffe comes when I ask Doug if they're doctors, after I overhear something about McLean. "No," Doug replies. That's it. Any elaboration would've been better than the awkward silence that followed, even if the reply was, "Ted there was my bitch in prison, and I know Robbie from back when we were in rehab for glue-sniffing." As it is, he leaves me to ponder the McLean comment. Was he talking about the McLean mental hospital? And if so, is there a significant chance that our foursome will be broken up at some point by burly men with butterfly nets?

At the eighth hole, there's a dude sitting by the tee box selling golf balls. My cohorts studiously ignore him, but I'm almost out of ammo. He only wants $15 for his whole stash—too much of a bargain to resist—and so, after teeing off, I waddle off toward the green toting my clubs and four plastic grocery bags filled with 130 balls. This does not improve my pace.

When the 10th hole rolls around, I'm not sure who's more relieved it's over—me or my forced partners. I was slow, I made unpleasant conversation, and I engaged a hobo in commerce. I'm beginning to see why my friends are so often busy when I suggest a round of golf.

To the movies, then. A movie would seem the perfect solo endeavor, since it's dark in the theater and you're not supposed to talk anyway. I settle in with popcorn and soda and get ready for s serious vice, Miami-style. I'm exc about my movie adventure until the scene—the first, it turns out, of what be multiple sex scenes.

Sex scenes present a problem w you're by yourself. First of all, there's body for me to elbow conspiratorially tell, "Bang a Gong, get it on!" when C Farrell and Gong Li get nekkid. Seco watching sex scenes by yourself in a d theater has serious Pee-wee Herman o tones. So whenever the beast with backs comes onscreen, I casually drape hands over the seat in front of me, in view, as if to say, "Look, everyone! Just joying a movie by myself! Nothing stra about that, as you can see!"

I love the movie, but after a good fli always want to discuss the particularly a some moments. Since I saw Miami Vice myself, I'm forced to go home and ruin whole plot for my fiancée. I can't help m self. Someone has to hear about how muc now want to grow a mustache and a mul and run drugs into Miami in a speedboat.

It appears I'm not cut out for the lo life, at least as far as golf and movies go there's too much time for introspecti and I make it a policy to avoid introsp tion. One of Wayne "No Relation" Dy feel-good self-help quotes goes, "You c not be lonely if you like the person you alone with." Yes, but what if you don't l the person you're alone with? Obvious Wayne doesn't go around humming t Giant Glass jingle and get it stuck in own head. He doesn't annoy himself leaving unfolded clothes on the bed un he wants to go to sleep at night. He does walk instead of taking a cart on a 90 deg day, just for the sake of getting some ex cise. But if he does, he should give m call soon. I'd really like to play nine ho and see Talladega Nights. IB

My Day with Charles Barkley

For Sir Charles, fun is just par for the course.

About 15 years ago, just as the IMPROPER was set to grace the streets of Boston for the first time, Charles Barkley was in the prime of his Hall of Fame NBA career. A little more than 15 days ago, he was in a much better place, at least as far as I'm concerned—on a golf course with me and my buddy Carl for Mohegan Sun's annual Ahmad Rashad Celebrity Golf Classic.

While the "celebrity" aspect of the event prevented Carl and me from playing golf that day, the "media" aspect of the passes around our necks gave us unfettered access to the star-studded crew of athletes in attendance. Besides Rashad himself, we spotted Marcus Allen, John Havlicek, Vince Coleman, Mike Eruzione, Rollie Fingers, even Lawrence Taylor and Dr. J. But as we fought off the urge to lob firecrackers at Coleman, there was only one place we wanted to be: alongside one of the most candid and provocative sports figures alive.

We caught up with Barkley—whose foursome included world long-drive champion Sean Fister, ex-MLB slugger Bobby Bonilla and former NFL star Dick Anderson—on the par-three eighth hole, where it took just one swing of the club to confirm the rumors. Barkley is, quite possibly, one of the world's worst golfers.

As he walked back to his cart after driving a ball straight into the drink, I casually asked, "How's it going, Charles?" For most people, this question elicits a one-word response (maybe two words, on a bad day). But there are no short answers in Sir Charles' world. "Man, of course I'm good," he called back. "Look at me. I'm young, I'm good looking, I'm retired, and I got more money than I could ever spend. I'm always good."

The following 10 holes might have been the most fun I've ever had out on a course—and I wasn't even playing.

On nine, Carl and I helped Barkley look for a ball that landed (as usual) in about eight inches of rough. As we approached the treacherous patch, he warned, "You don't want to go in there, I think Jimmy Hoffa's buried in there." But it's not everyday you get to help a Hall of Famer find an errant tee shot, so we marched on.

After two minutes, Charles tracked down the ball, took his drop and triumphantly claimed, "I might suck, but I'm not a cheater!" His next shot went into the woods, just as Dr. J. drove past us in his cart. (At this point, I wouldn't have been surprised if I came across Michael Jordan and Wayne Gretzky wrestling in a bunker.)

The Doctor spotted a ball sitting safely i the fairway, stopped his cart and yelled, ' know that's not Barkley's!" He smiled an moved on.

When he wasn't receiving updates on h friend Tiger Woods' progress at the Britis Open, Charles signed autographs for any one who asked, picked little kids out of th gallery to help tend the pin on his putt and constantly took jabs at his playing part ners. After sinking a putt, a jubilan Barkley turned to Bonilla—who's actuall three days younger than Charles—and said "You know, it's always great playing wit you. I was a big fan of yours when I was lit tle." Bonilla didn't miss a beat. "Charles we all know you were never little."

During the day's slower moments, w were hypnotized by Professor Barkley's im promptu lectures. He explained the secre to stopping Dwyane Wade. ("Every tim he goes right, he's taking it to the hoop and every time he goes left, he's taking tw dribbles and a jumper. And those are the only two ways he can go!") And he reflected on the greatness of fellow Alabamian and Auburn alum Bo Jackson. ("One of the things I'm most thankful for in life was growing up near Bo and getting to watch him play all the time. I always told him that he never should have played baseball.") It was probably the most surreal experience of my life.

> IT TOOK JUST ONE SWING TO CONFIRM THE RUMORS BARKLEY IS, QUITE POSSIBLY, ONE OF THE WORLD'S WORST GOLFERS.

Now, whether or not Barkley's worthy of a bedroom in the Alabama Governor's Mansion—well, that's not for me to say. But after years of listening to other people's stories about the time they ran into Charles Barkley, I'm just glad that I now have my own stories to share. And I'll be sharing them with anyone who's willing to listen. IB

Spooner ON

JONATHAN SOROFF

BY JOHN D. SPOONER

I gave a small speech at a Boston Public Library dinner several years ago and talked about, among other things, the interviews Jonathan Soroff does for his column in the IMPROPER. I called him "the best interviewer in Boston" because he asks the most unusual, provocative questions. Somehow I've dared to interview the master.

John D. Spooner: You have a sneaky fastball. It's difficult getting people to cough it up. What prepared you for this?

Jonathan Soroff: I'm utterly shameless. It's actually impossible to shame me. And I have no sense of boundaries. Somehow that makes people want to spout.

JDS: How many nights a week are you out on the town for work-related events?

JS: Everything is work related. However, what little soul I have would be fairly selective if it were not charity related. I will rarely attend private parties for people seeking publicity. But I actually love charitable causes. I want to help, to give back.

JDS: What was in your favorite swag bag?

JS: Yes, swag is good. I've gotten Tiffany candlesticks, Chelsea clocks, Shreve bowls, a Valentino tie. The only reason I went to the Barneys party was for the swag, but there wasn't any.

JDS: Then you're a whore?

JS: Hell, yes. I'm a dirty, dirty, dirty whore. I haven't paid for fancy soap or cosmetics since I've been working.

JDS: Are there party crashers in Boston?

JS: You bet. There are several older men and women who are always crashing the hottest parties. It's amazing who'd kill for free shrimp.

JDS: What's the crudest or phoniest thing you've ever seen at a party?

JS: In general, the most forced, phony and awkward—if not crude—events are always the ones featuring politicians.

JDS: You seem to be loving these functions. Is that for real, or is it Memorex?

JS: Well, it's not exactly like shoveling shit behind the elephants at the circus. But occasionally, like at the end of May, in black tie at the Four Seasons, I've said to myself, "If I have to eat one more beef tenderloin, I'll go up in a puff of smoke."

JDS: What do you do with your leisure time?

JS: I write fiction. And, like many people who appear to be incredibly social, I have a strong monastic streak. My idea of a really good time includes spending time on Martha's Vineyard, reading, listening to music, and cooking for friends. And I like to work out. Wanna arm wrestle?"

> "MY PARENTS TOLD ME I WAS AS GOOD AS ANYONE, SO I HAVE NO FEAR ABOUT ASKING LOOPY QUESTIONS."

JDS: No thanks, but what's your routine? And, how has your life changed in this regard since your heart incident [a valve replacement in 2004]?

JS: Ahhh, affairs of the heart have always intrigued me. I actually work out five times a week and do yoga three times each week. I also run and do weight training. In the summer I rollerblade and run. As for my brush with mortality, I have no bad dreams. As Zola said, "I came here to live out loud." All the more reason for my desire to suck all the marrow out of life.

JDS: What's your all-time favorite book and movie?

JS: As a child, Lord of the Rings, was my favorite. My childhood, of course, has never really stopped. But my favorites now are West With the Night by Beryl Markham, Democracy by Joan Didion, and The Great Gatsby. My all-time favorite movie is Auntie Mame.

JDS: Is Doris Yaffe one of your Auntie Mames?

JS: Doris is one of them. Actually, I'm her Auntie Mame.

JDS: There's a duality about you. No society reporter is as cerebral. Do you love and enjoy people or is it a put on?

JS: People are my game. They are endlessly fascinating, but I admit that I seem to be always drawn to colorful characters, if not freaks.

JDS: You seem like Peter Pan; toujours gai. What are you going to do when you grow up?

JS: I'll be cashing the royalty checks at the casino in Monte Carlo.

JDS: What was your major in college? What was your first job?

JS: I went to Duke where I majored in English literature, drinking and drugs. Not necessarily in that order. My first job and one of the great times of my life was as an editorial assistant on the city desk at the Boston Herald. Writing obits taught me brevity and the economical use of words. The Herald experience taught me to write. I'm forever grateful for that.

JDS: With the increasing decline of standards in society, are we going down the drain in America?

JS: No, we're not really. Except in our dress. It annoys me to see people at the symphony or ballet in jeans and T-shirts. Bianca Jagger's rule of thumb applies: I always dress as if I have somewhere better to go.

JDS: What have been the biggest changes in the IMPROPER over the last 15 years?

JS: Watching the IMPROPER come of age has been incredibly gratifying. We've gone from ordinary black-and-white to a glossy magazine that everyone, and I mean everyone, reads. I am always amazed at the diversity of the people who read my column. From hard hats to CEOs, men and women, old and young. It's the ultimate high to love what you do and the organization around you.

JDS: What have been your favorite interviews and your least favorite?

JS: All my favorites have been surprises to me, which is the fun of interviewing. You never know. The best have been Matt Damon, Conan O'Brien, Alan Dershowitz, David Chokachi [who played Cody on Baywatch]; they're some of the funniest and smartest. The worst include Jay Leno, Lesley Stahl, and Mike Wallace, probably because they're not used to having the tables turned with people interviewing them. And Julie Taymor was the most painful. She was deadpan and not forthcoming.

JDS: How come you instinctively ask the unusual question?

JS: Mostly because I don't give a damn. The fame part is meaningless, but why is he or she an appealing person? My parents told me I was as good as anyone, so I have no fear about asking loopy questions. They thought my finger paintings were by Picasso.

JDS: If you could have a dinner party with any three living people, who would you pick?

JS: Queen Elizabeth, because she's the last of an extinct species on Earth; Osama Bin Laden, to see what makes him tick before they carry him out in chains; and Anderson Cooper of CNN. Because he's clever, so smart, and because he needs to be my husband.

JDS: Who in Boston would you best like to be seated next to at a fabulous dinner?

JS: That would be me.

JDS: If you had to choose, would you rather be feared or loved?

JS: Power lies in not exercising it, so there's no reason to fear me. I'm with the Beatles: "All you need is love."

JDS: Do you have a phrase or motto that could serve as your epitaph?

JS: "Reasonably decorative, devilishly clever, wildly entertaining." IB

Time flies when you're having a blast.

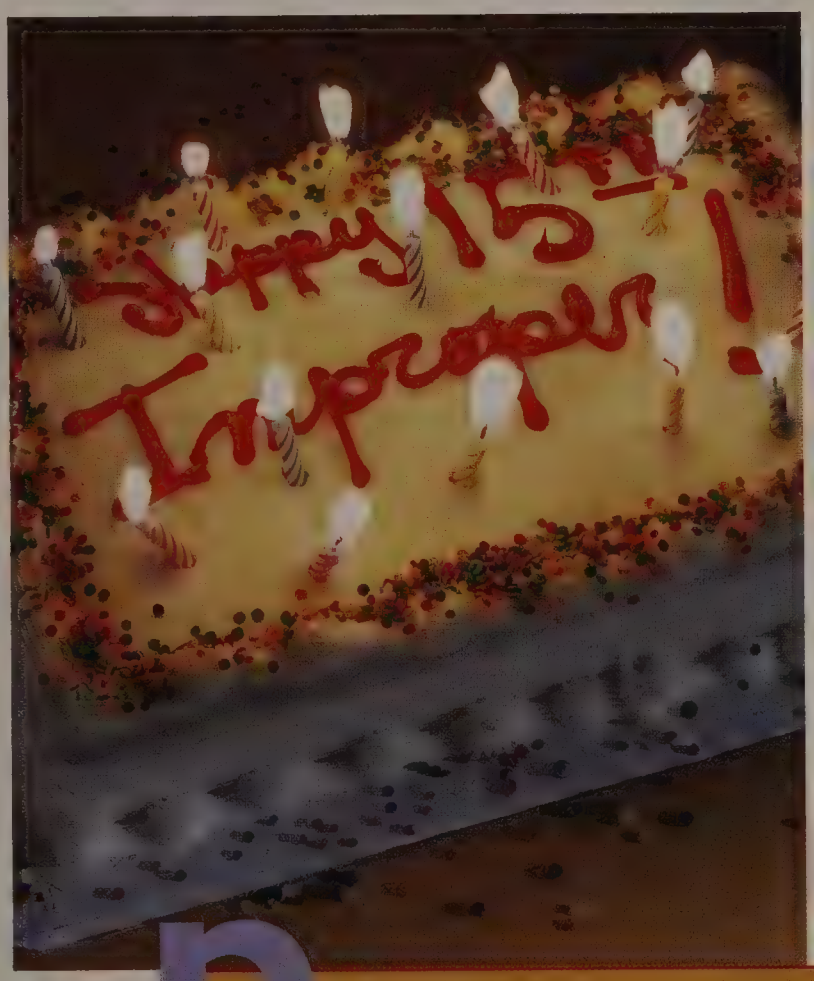
When I began writing for THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, it was a free, unbound, black-and-white tabloid, printed on low-quality newsprint. Our biggest advertiser was probably a mom-and-pop falafel place in Central Square. Our offices were a rabbit warren of rooms in a rickety warehouse across the street from the Brookline ge T stop, which meant we had a lot of nerve calling ourselves the Bostonian any-g. Ray Flynn was still mayor of Boston, having yet to be named ambassador to the can, and we had a Republican governor who proudly proclaimed his affinity for both sachusetts and brown liquor, instead of a teetotaling Mormon known for bad-thing the state. But I digress.

ack in the early '90s, our editorial staff made up for in inexperience what it lacked in ertise, and when an editor abruptly quit on a press week, it might easily have been non-English-speaking cleaning lady who was d to read page proofs (a slight exaggeration, not by much). As for computers, cameras and r tools of the trade, we joked that our motto "Yesterday's technology today."

One thing to keep in mind, however, is that ke most successful Boston media companies, ch seem to spring like well-funded turkey-fungus from the bark of some mighty corpo- tree (virtually all other popular city mags in ton are owned by larger entities, own other nesses, or both), the IMPROPER has always n a small, closely held family business, and as sult, necessity has always forced us to pro- e an outstanding magazine on a comparative estring.

Not to say that we've ever shied away from ex-agance. Our founding publisher, Mark Semon- for example, wanted to install a hot tub on the of the first building we occupied on Newbury et, and we were the print sponsor for the second ual Nantucket Film Festival, for which we w a lavish party at one of Cliff Road's fanciest nsions. People were dancing on the Duncan fe dining room table, and the police were finally ed to join the party after failing to get anyone to e. Nantucketers still talk about that party, and a are still nursing the hangover. In our youth, we n had some major stars on our covers, like na White, back when she was the blonde du and Jessica Simpson, Britney Spears and Paris Hilton were still ng baby food out of necessity rather than bulimia.

From the start, our only ambition was to create an entertaining magazine aimed at the people who live here—and to help ders take advantage of everything Boston has to offer (a mis- that still applies). We also tried to tweak the establishment h columns like "The Last Call Lady"—an unabashed, first-per- account of a voracious female's sexual escapades, which pre- ed Sex and the City—and the Improper Impersonals, which tinue to offer our readers a forum for venting their pet peeves reconnecting with that appealing stranger they were too shy to roach at a club.



> People were dancing on the Duncan Phyfe dining room table, and the police were finally forced to join the party after failing to get anyone to leave.

We were the first magazine in the city to laud Boston's most talented bartenders, the to have an Internet Top 40 issue (back when it was relevant) and the first to run a rly ski issue (which we discontinued only because the après-ski scene at the Pickle rel at Killington doesn't change significantly from year to year). And while we may have been the first to hand out "best" awards for the finest restaurants, stores, goods services, we made hay when a competitor slapped us with a cease-and-desist order, iming copyright infringement. In true IMPROPER style, our publisher, Mark Semonian, llenged his opposite number at the other magazine to a parallel parking contest to tle the issue. Sadly, he wasn't taken up on it, which is too bad for the other magazine, ause Mark was never a particularly good driver.

Over the years we've often tried, with no small success, to flirt with controversy. For mple, we ran a cover story detailing the bitter, longtime feud between the two scions the Saunders real estate family, Donald and Roger. The only problem: Donald was our dlord at the time, in the aforementioned building on Newbury Street, and instead of ot tub on the roof, we got an eviction notice.

"Jonathan, you've met Donald Saunders, haven't you?" Mark asked me. "See if you can talk him out of it."

I said, "Mark, the man hasn't spoken to his brother in 20 years. What makes you think he's going to forgive you?"

We moved shortly thereafter, and again several times, until we landed in our current home at the corner of Berkeley Street and Columbus Ave.

Another time, under editor Nancy Gaines, we created a sensation by publishing the private, semi-pornographic love faxes between billionaire Bill Koch and his then-girlfriend, Kate de Castelbajac, whom he was trying to pry out of his condo at the Four Seasons in a nasty little legal imbroglio. It was the first (and, to my knowledge, last) time that the IMPROPER was quoted in both the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal, and months later, I found myself at a party with Nancy Gaines, where Bill Koch was also a guest.

"I want to meet him," she said.

"Nancy, you can't," I said. "No one would blame him if he poured his drink over your head."

A bit later, I found myself talking to Koch and his wife, studiously trying to avoid any mention of where I worked, and predictably, Nancy materialized at my elbow.

"Nancy Gaines from THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN," she said, thrusting out her hand.

The party came to a screeching halt while everyone waited to see what would happen.

Koch, ever the gentleman, said, "Nice to meet you," and there was an audible sigh of relief. Then he added: "Y'know, I think in your article I came off looking better than Kate."

True to form, Gaines replied, "No, you didn't. You both looked like assholes," and within minutes, she and Koch were exchanging business cards.

The last 15 years haven't been without low points—most notably the untimely deaths of Leslie Semonian, Mark's sister and a contributor to the magazine since its inception, and Jim Pite, who ran our advertising department and kept the entire staff laughing at even the most stressful times. Longtime staffers remember them still, and I for one feel sure they'd be proud of what we've accomplished.

In geological terms, a decade and a half is barely the blink of an eye, but for a start-up city magazine to not only survive but thrive over that period of time is nothing short of miraculous. It's incredibly gratifying to be a part of something that started from such humble, "Hey kids, let's publish a magazine!" beginnings and has grown into a slick, glossy, full-color must-read, now captained by our incredibly savvy, ass-kicking publisher, Wendy Semonian (Mark's sister), and our super-capable workhorse of an editor, Veronica Chao. I can't estimate the number of times I've told someone where I work and they've said, "I love that magazine!" or how proud I feel to be part of such an incredible enterprise, with such a dedicated and talented staff. More than anything, it's the people on our masthead who ensure the consistent excellence of this publication.

So we've yet to win a Pulitzer Prize or send anyone off to be a scholar-in-residence at the Shorenstein Center, but we have managed to lure and retain such top-flight talent as humor columnist Ezra Dyer, who now also has regular gigs at Esquire, the New York Times, and Automobile; financial guru, novelist and Boston legend John Spooner; wine expert Sandy Block; inveterate journalist Mopsy Strange Kennedy; music scribe Paul Robicheau; and award-winning photojournalist Kerry Brett Hurley, to name a mere few.

In any case, we've had a helluva good time putting this thing together, and we hope you've had as much fun reading it. That noise you hear in the background is the sound of champagne corks popping.

Here's to another 15 years. iB

THEY SAID IT, YOU READ IT

Can you match these quotes from our most IMPROPER interviews with the high-profile Bostonians who uttered them?

1. "[Getting a Harvard MBA is] like getting 'USDA' stamped on your butt if you're a cow. It doesn't mean you're any better. It just means the inspector checked you out and stamped your butt."

2. "Why can't people put their trash in a litter basket, or keep it in their pocket if there isn't one nearby? Why do they want to be so messy?"

3. "I worked at Foreign Motors on Comm. Ave. So I'd take a Rolls or a Mercedes for a spin, take it to class. I'd pick people up—a few girls actually thought I was Donovan because I had long black hair then."

4. "Gays in the military. I think there should be more, and then maybe there'd be less war. 'Captain, I couldn't shoot him. He was gorgeous!'"

5. "Two things white people do that drive me crazy are to say 'If more blacks were like you, we wouldn't have racial problems.' The other is, as a student in a classroom, when an issue involving race would come up, all the white people would turn to me and expect me to be the oracle about it."

6. "A lot of [critics] are put off by a fart joke, but they don't mind the worst kind of violence in movies. So f--- 'em."

7. "Hunter Thompson came in and was complaining because he had to get up so early, and he f---ing hated Boston and hated doing radio, so we just brought him in the production room and gave him a mound of cocaine and he went and did an ID for us…"

8. "I think everyone is unhinged to some degree. I just happen to like portraying those people."

9. "When I grew up, we'd talk about what we were going to eat tomorrow while we were still enjoying the lobster that we were eating that night. Same for the Jewish culture, the Mexican culture, the Italian culture. Food is the culture."

10. "I hope they sign me for like 10 more years. I kind of like it here."

11. "I'm intimidated by everything. I always think the people I work with know much more than I do about what's going on. But it's a positive thing, because I approach it as an opportunity to learn."

12. "[My career] really did come from a pretty pure place of just wanting to make people laugh in any way possible. Even if that meant hurting myself, which I've done several times."

13. "I can say, without compunction, that [the nuns'] goal in life was to crush our spirits. Every ounce of individuality that peeked through was immediately squashed."

14. "[T]here's a piece of me that's very private that is sometimes mistaken for aloofness, but it's really just wanting to curl up with a book or hide away somewhere and veg a little."

15. "I love Lipton Noodle Soup, and when I make it, I have to make it so that it comes out to exactly three bowls, and I have to have Premium saltines, and I break them up into four pieces. It has to be three bowls' worth, exactly."

16. "I'd like to think I've shown the world that one-legged women can be as trashy and despicable as everyone else."

17. "I have a great form of anger management. It's called Jameson Irish Whiskey."

18. "…[Barbara Walters is] a helluva lady. She's smart. She's capable, determined and, I'd imagine, lonely."

19. "I go to a therapist and then have another therapist ride in the car with me to the next therapist. Right now, I'm at a stage where all my therapists are just talking to each other. I don't even have to go; they do group without me."

20. "I'd heard of [sex wax] and I knew it wasn't sexually related, but I didn't know it was for surfing."

21. "A Jewish lawyer getting Jesus acquitted would've changed history, and I think I could've gotten him off. If you look at the conflicts between the hearsay accounts and the different gospels, I think the evidence against him was pretty weak."

22. "It was in winter time and I was in Weston, Mass., doing a remodeling job… I remember I was banging nails in the snow all day long, and that's when I said… 'I'm going to do something different with my life.'"

23. "I was a long-haired freak, which put me in the minority because Boston University was filled with JAPs and 'beautiful people.'"

24. "In 40 years, we're all gonna look back at this [debate over gay marriage] and say, 'Oh, that was embarrassing,' the same way we look back at states that banned interracial marriage. So my argument is just, 'Let's spare ourselves the embarrassment.'"

25. "[MTV] is like dealing with a drug dealer. It gets you high but there's a big price you pay for it."

26. "I used to joke that if there was a talent competition, I would burp because I'm really good at it. I can out-burp anyone on this planet. But at some point you have to start acting like a lady."

27. "There's no such things as writer's block at a newspaper. They won't let you have it. You say to your editor, 'I have writer's block,' he says, 'Get the hell outta my office.'"

28. "I wish I'd been in the bunker with Hitler at the end. That would've been a great interview."

29. "I haven't worn underwear since I was 14."

30. "It's important to feed a man good food and pay him a little attention."

THEN AND NOW

BY SEETHA NARAYAN

Fifteen years ago you were more youthful, perhaps more innocent, maybe even a tad broke. But because it was, and still is, free, you might've picked up the first copy of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN when it hit the streets in August 1991. It was a different world then. Or was it? To find out, we looked for slices of life from 1991, birth year of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, and 2006, the year of our 15th anniversary. Here's what we found.

In our wallets: RENT

Median cost for a two-bedroom in Boston in 1991, $875; in 2006, $1,700

Thank god there are JOBS in Boston

582,331 in 1991, 636,829 in 2006

FEWER government employees:
92,205 in 1991, about 76,862 in 2006

MORE female science faculty:

The other women's cancer: Why silence is deadly

OVARIAN CANCER

This year, nearly 22,000 women will be diagnosed with ovarian cancer and 16,000 will die from the disease. Because the symptoms of this silent disease are easily overlooked, 70% of women are diagnosed too late for treatment to be effective. In fact, only one in five of all ovarian cancers are discovered in the early, most treatable stage – before the cancer has spread outside of the ovaries when it would be 90% treatable. Fewer than half of all women are alive five years after the diagnosis.

Know the symptoms of ovarian cancer

Identifying ovarian cancer at its earliest stage can help improve survival.

Abdominal pressure, swelling, discomfort (Clothes fit too tight)
Nausea, indigestion, or gas
Urinary or bowel problems: Urinary frequency, constipation or diarrhea
Abnormal vaginal bleeding or discharge
Unusual fatigue or fever
Unexplained weight loss or gain
Shortness of breath
Pain: back pain or pain during intercourse

While these symptoms also represent common problems that affect most women at different times, it's important to be aware of them. If you have one or more of these symptoms and if they persist for three weeks or more, see your doctor immediately.

ANGELS IN CAMBRIDGE

The Friends of Mount Auburn Cemetery offers two audio walking tours and a driving tour, all to rent or buy. Call 617-547-7105, or e-mail friends@mountauburn.org.

Besides offering lectures, walks for birders and other programs, Mount Auburn Cemetery is famous for its incredible beauty. Prompted by an elegant voice on a tape, the driving tour takes you past beautiful gravestones and impressive monuments marking the notable dead. A whinnying sound, recalling horse-drawn carriages, announces the moment when you're meant to move on, one of the many charmingly old-timey features of the tour. Going over more curvy, lusciously green hills and valleys, past more ancient and enormous trees than you can imagine, and imposing black wrought-iron gates containing whole families, past a gigantic Sphinx statue bigger than two SUVs, you eventually reach the Washington Tower, a memorial to abolition. (Climb its 88 steps for a breathtaking, panoramic view of the Boston skyline—from here to, perhaps, eternity.) Boston notables, literary, legal and otherwise, repose in splendor: Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Charles Bulfinch, Felix Frankfurter, Isabella Stewart Gardner. Heartbreaking graves of babies and children, often several together, lie in family plots containing up to seven generations. Mary Baker Eddy's neoclassical memorial building stands next to its own large, tranquil lake. The taped commentary includes snippets of poetry and quotes echoing melancholy, spiritual 19th-century views of death and the hereafter, along with biographical tales of the impressive "residents" surrounded by flowers and vegetation.

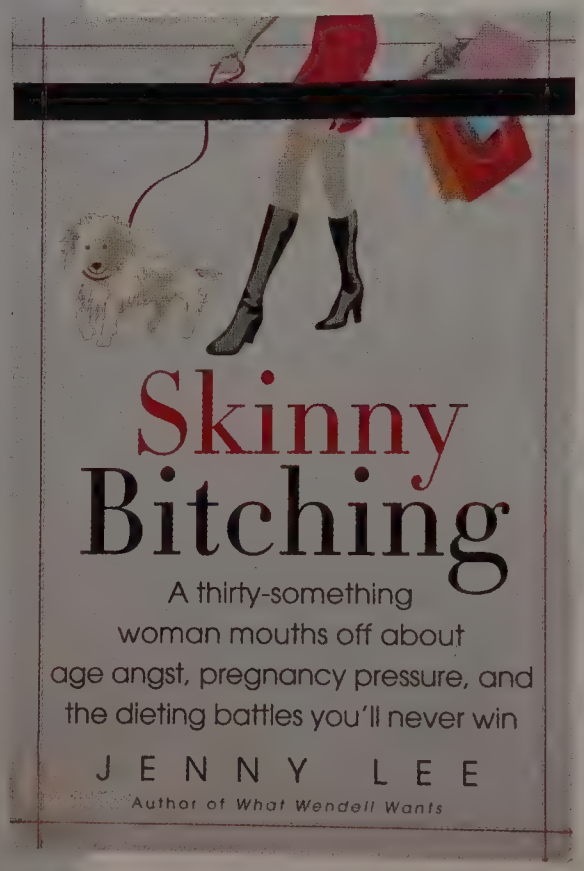
HEADS UP! HEAVENLY, SPARKLY CHANDELIERS

City Lights (2226 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-547-1490) sells antique lighting and does repairs. Open Wed.–Sat., 10 am–6 pm.

With its art nouveau neon greenery twining around the doorways, City Lights sells antique sconces, lamps and chandeliers made between 1850 and about 1930. Bowl-shaped fixtures that look like tortoise shell, though in reality they're alabaster, bring on a dramatic, upward "Wow!" So do the Murano wall sconces, ornamented like pretty party dresses with complexly crinkled, pink glass flowers. Crystal chandeliers, mostly dripping gorgeous teardrops or pearly prisms, are everywhere, many restored with interesting-yet-period-respecting variations. One emphasizes the dancing octopus shape of the glass arms, displaying a little golden sparkle. Other details show up in Egyptian-revival chandeliers, with little Sphinx heads, decisive carvings and a feeling that Cleopatra may soon glide by. Pragmatic and popular are the downward-facing Holophane bowl-shaped glass fixtures, decorated with thick, all-around ribbing, beaming clear, direct light over, say, cooking island. The sconces, littler sisters to the chandeliers, include romantically etched mirror style and now-wired fixtures with vestigial knobs that long-ago turned on the gas, others in interesting twisty, Rococo styles that contrast pleasantly with the blunter blandness of halogen lamps (none sol here). Some even swing outward to increase illumination. Look up; your ceiling is a wide open space pleading for dramatic decoration!

STAND-UP COMEDIAN AT THE KEYBOARD

Local author Jenny Lee, who wrote about her dog in What Wendell Wants, battles old age in her early 30s in Skinny Bitching. This compilation of essays is set in Lee's hometown of Cambridge.



What is it about the intense chattering patter of Jenny Lee that makes her so funny? Her persona—and doubtless her actual person—obsesses and hand wrings and self-torturingly goes on in detail about things that really are somewhat superficial: the endless diets, being bad at yoga, fending off her mother's criticisms, overshopping and driving her doctor-husband quietly insane with her multiple, miniature, crumpled worries. And she agonizes about bigger things, too, like waving goodbye to her "youth" now that her 20s, though not her native girlishness, are over; about having a baby someday, and a possible move out to the suburbs like her friends; or, mostly jokingly, imagining having an affair. She's surprisingly charming about revealing her royal-pain side, like disgruntling her patient husband by typing on an antique typewriter the words "Marriage is stupid," then wending her long, winsome, witty way back into his good graces. She's at her best describing the adventure of "raising" a Tamagotchi, an electronic baby she names Zeus. As his "mother," she has to feed and soothe, and project onto him: "Yes, that's right. I could start living out my dreams through him. Hell, maybe Zeus would become a photographer who worked for a tabloid and I could get all the gossip early."

BACK TO THE FUTURE

At Brookline's Lineage, old and new blend seamlessly.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Coolidge Corner doesn't want for restaurants. Most are ethnic in origin and orientation, ranging from Mexican to Indian, Thai, Chinese and Japanese. Shortly after the first of the year, a new ethnic group made its mark with the opening of Lineage: Massachusetts Bay Yankees. The restaurant's name pays tribute to chef/owner Jeremy Sewall's Yankee ancestors, who were among the founders of Brookline. Adapting Yankee-style industry to the expanded gastronomic horizons of a multicultural world, Sewall imports flavors and flare from both Europe and Asia, bringing them to bear on top-notch local ingredients. Lineage's food isn't full-blown "fusion" as that term is commonly understood, but it does fuse solid cooking technique, culinary know-how honed in Sewall's years at the Lark Creek Inn in Northern California, and an expertise with seafood showcased by his brief but distinguished tenure as the first chef at Great Bay.

Lineage occupies space formerly home to Lucy's, which focused on low-fat, healthful cuisine, and before that, Zaatar's Oven, from which Lineage has inherited a useful artifact: its imposing wood-burning oven, whose rough-textured, bulbous hulk looms behind the bar like a beached UFO. Lineage puts the oven to good use in turning out a first-rate pizza ($9) with crimini mushrooms, truffle oil and broad-leafed Italian parsley on a thin, crisp crust. Lineage's menu changes daily, with the chef constantly refreshing, renewing and revising his offerings. Onion tart ($10), another appetizer one evening, delivered a quiche nicely balanced between sweet and savory on a slightly buttery, flaky pastry crust brightened by mint. Three spears of bright green asparagus, mounted on top, were slightly firm to the bite and full of fresh, spring flavor.

Seafood figured prominently among the appetizers. Prince Edward Island mussels ($10), steamed in a curry broth with Thai basil, red peppers and scallions, arrived in a handsome, covered cast-iron casserole with a crunchy, crusty slice of grilled bread. The shelled mussels had a clean, fresh, naturally sweet flavor, a harbinger of other seafood triumphs to come. The crab cake ($14 as a dinner appetizer, $12 at lunch) brought a single, substantial cylinder of fresh, sweet crab meat, very little breading, diced red onion and red and yellow peppers. Sautéed to a golden brown and served with mango salsa and a small garnish of baby greens laced with almonds and red peppers, the crab cake was enhanced by a dollop of piquant lemon-pepper aioli. The wood-burning oven was pressed back into service for the cod cheeks ($11), one of Sewall's signature dishes. These fleshy, pleasantly fatty nuggets of cod delivered their full flavor and were highlighted by an accompanying sauce of fleshy tomatoes, enlivened with oregano or marjoram, savory crumbles of chorizo and golden raisins that transported me back to the southern coast of the Iberian peninsula.

So superb were the appetizers at Lineage that I approached the main courses with some apprehension. Many ambitious restaurants give their first courses their best shot, and fade in the stretch with the main courses. Not so Lineage. Lamb shank ($19), a highlight of the wi menu—and discontinued as Boston's ter segued into summer with hardly a of spring—brought a meat-laden b with moist, assertively flavored lamb f Colorado, infused with Mediterran herbs and braised to fall-off-the-fork derness. Honey-bourbon-glazed root etables—carrots, parsnips and rutaba delivered sweet-savory earthiness. accompaniment of pearl pasta, resemb large-grain couscous, soaked up the he sauce made from a reduction of the co ing juices.

Reminiscent of his Great Bay trium Sewall's roasted halibut ($29) confir the preeminence of Atlantic halibut firm, flaky flesh and mild yet distinc flavor the unmistakable product of cold waters off the Maine coast. This piece of fish shared its plate with la grain Israeli couscous and tart-sweet g tomatoes, stark but delicious in their plicity. Perhaps the most fortuitous us Zaatar's old wood-fired oven was eage's oak-roasted chicken ($19): an tire half of a plump bird, its crisp skin casing succulent, tender flesh, and rendered juices transformed into a d savory gravy with a pleasantly smoky vor resulting from wood-fire roast Garnishes of creamy polenta, br green, pleasantly bitter spinach sweet-savory grilled Bermuda onions vided satisfying counterpoints of co texture and flavor.

At lunch, Lineage served an exc tional burger ($11). This patty of sup lean beef, grilled medium-rare as orde had been seared to seal in its full, beef flavor and juicy texture. A first- brioche roll and a garnish of half-s pickles and pickled onions made burger a benchmark against which other local restaurant burgers must measured. Rosemary fries, slender, l and fresh out of the fryer, conferred a come dividend. A final lunch select ham and cheese sandwich ($9), tur out to be a croque monsieur, a grille fair with toasted, buttery bread, cre cheese and sweet-salty ham coexis marvelously.

Desserts at Lineage were a mixed The bread pudding ($7), a remark

While Lineage's food ranged from often uisite to occasionally ordinary, its décor, ambience and general level of service made each of my visits special. The smaller dining room features mustard walls, light yellow tiles under and behind the bar, tile flooring and a drop ceiling with handsome curved lines over the bar. The larger dining room's painted wood paneling terminates halfway up one wall at a narrow shelf, on which are mounted votive candles and miniature urn vases with fresh flowers. Lineage's wine selection seemed wanting in the lower price range (my first selection was out of stock on both occasions I tried to order it), and the least expensive red, a grapey Capistrano Montepulciano d'Abruzzi ($7.50/glass) seemed flabby. The Mark West pinot noir ($8.00/glass) showed better acid to balance the fruit. Best of all was the 2003 Las Rocas Garnacha San Alejandro ($28/bottle), a Spanish grenache that combined pleasant softness with good acidity and a sturdy backbone.

My three visits to Lineage stretched over three months, and the servers—consistently earnest and hardworking—improved substantially over that period. The tentativeness that greeted me on my first visit abated, and the staff seemed to have settled into the comfort of knowing that they were serving a superior product by an accomplished chef who was turning this hitherto unlucky location into a destination restaurant. t's All Greek to TV aul Delios on Meze, on his feet, n the air...

CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Paul Delios wouldn't be the first local chef to go from table to cable, but the Food Network isn't his first oice to air It's All Greek, the cooking w for which he's eagerly gathering both lerwriters and ideas.

"PBS has always been my first choice," says, "since I grew up watching chefs Julia Child." But he's less picky about ential sources of funding. After all, thony Bourdain's No Reservations is ught to you by those nice bland folks the Olive Garden, and Good Eats on Food Network is sponsored by a pet d company. "You take whatever you can ," he says.

What Delios desires is a forum to showcase "modern take on Greek cuisine. I take ek ingredients and twist them into some- ng different." For example, before he left arlestown's Meze Estiatorio last March, separated eggs to make a meringue atop version of egg-lemon soup. He'll reduce a xture of honey, Aleppo pepper, red wine egar and lemon juice to make a sweet- l-sour sauce for calamari. In a nod to the ditional fish dish called plaki, he'll use e of the same ingredients to create a kind eviche, "served nice and cold in a martini ss with crispy pita chips."

Will Delios be our next on-air cooking t? He's certainly a fine chef who played a role in establishing Meze's success. d his show has a killer logo: the Parthe- n built from Greek ingredients, topped h a wedge of feta. Stay tuned.

EZE MORPHS INTO COPIA

Delios turns his attention to new pro- ts, his former venue has been sold to ef Anthony Caturano, who owns ezza in the North End.

"It's open as Meze now," says Caturano. "e've made some menu changes—more od-grilled items, skewers for lunch." But biggest change will happen in a month or when Meze will be replaced by Copia. med after the Roman goddess of plenty, pia will be neither "strictly Greek" nor lian, says Caturano. Instead, the menu will w from Italian, Portuguese, Greek, Span- and other Mediterranean influences.

Watch for steamed clams Portuguese le, braised baby octopus and "simple, seas- al desserts" created by pastry chef Paige tus, who garnered fame at Olives and has en consulting with Caturano at Prezza. , and baklava will stay on the menu.

Paul Delios hopes to soon be on a TV near you with his show, It's All Greek.

BIGGER BUT STILL BASIC SWEET BASIL

Don't expect many changes beyond additional seating once Sweet Basil finally opens its expanded dining area in September or October. The Needham storefront, well-known for its nightly lines of hungry diners at the door, will retain its no-reservations policy, says owner/chef Dave Becker.

"I just want to eliminate the horse-pucky, like people waiting for two hours," he says. "Aggravate everybody equally, and they'll be pissed off, but they won't take it personally and hate you." They will, however, appreciate the new bathrooms and the new back door, which means Becker's "fish delivery guys won't be dribbling fish juice through the restaurant area past the diners." Lovely.

SPIRE HIRE

David Reynoso, most recently chef at the Butcher Shop in the South End, has been heading up the kitchen at Spire for nearly two months now, but you'll have to wait until September to sample his new menu.

Compared with the upscale fare created by former chef Gabriel Frasca, Reynoso's menu will be, he says, "more casual, more inviting, more approachable." Look for "local ingredients combined with a Mediterranean touch," dishes that reflect Reynoso's Mexican heritage, and a dining experience that's less "special occasion" and "more comfortable." IB

Museums and Galleries: The Kids Are Alright

Being a rock musician isn't just about posturing atop floodlit stages and stirring up a stadium full of screaming fans. There are bills to pay, meetings to endure… and children to raise. Boston-based photographer Kelly Davidson snaps portraits of local and national rock stars interacting with their kids, and her latest exhibition, titled Rock 'n' Roll Parents, appears at the Art Market Gallery in Jamaica Plain. Highlights from the show include Emily Grogan of the band Angeline, Nell Beram of the Magnetic Fields, David Minehan of the Neighborhoods and Henry Santoro from WFNX, to name just a few. You can hang with in-the-know art scenesters and check out the photos at the opening reception on Aug. 25 from 6–9 pm. *Art Market Gallery, 36 South St., Jamaica Plain (617-522-1729). www.jpartmarket.com. 9/11: The Movie

Is the world ready for World Trade Center?

BY SEAN BURNS

A sharp contrast to Paul Greengrass' brilliantly unnerving, documentary-style United 93, which opened and closed with nary a whisper back in April, Oliver Stone's World Trade Center trades on unabashed Hollywood melodrama. It's a lavishly produced, big-budget spectacle picture, offering a heartfelt salute to the brave men and women who gave their lives that awful morning. The movie is also so mawkish and corny, however, that I feel a bit uncomfortable admitting how much I liked it.

Michael Peña and Nicolas Cage in Oliver Stone's 9/11 epic

Nicolas Cage stars as Port Authority cop John McLoughlin, who along with fellow officer Will Jimeno (played here by Crash's locksmith, Michael Peña) wound up trapped beneath a mountain of rubble and concrete, some 20 feet under the World Trade Center's collapsed concourse. They were among the few survivors pulled from the wreckage, and Stone's film meticulously details the long, horrific day and night these two friends spent buried alive, bolstered by frequent cutaways to the traumas their families faced, as well as to the heroic efforts of rescue workers who risked their lives trying to dig them out.

Working from a clumsy screenplay by former Framingham resident Andrea Berloff, Stone has set aside the avant-garde editing techniques and restless political questioning that have made him one of our most controversial living filmmakers. Devoid of the hyperkinetic audiovisual feeding-frenzies that have marked his work since the early '90s, World Trade Center is photographed as an almost stately procession of bold, simple images. It's Stone's most conventional and straightforward piece of storytelling since Born on the Fourth of July, and no less brutally effective.

The film's heart-wrenchingly extended opening sequence shows us morning in New York, just simple shots of various characters commuting to work. We all know what's coming, so it's hard not to feel deep pangs of anxiety while seeing the city's skyline, intact for the very last time. The camera seems to linger a bit longer than necessary in these moments, as if inviting us to gaze and reflect.

Another interesting choice is Stone's decision not to compete with the television news footage that's been seared into our collective memories. He knows better than to stage a tactless special-effects extravaganza of planes smashing into the towers. His smarter, more poetic alternative is to follow Officer Jimeno walking his bus station beat. Our young flat-foot spots the too-low shadow of a hurtling jet, cast across Manhattan billboards. Stone cuts to a black screen, and the sound does the rest of the work.

Alas, Berloff's screenplay offers no such restraint. McLoughlin and Jimeno aren't so much characters as they are archetypes—flawlessly upstanding profiles in courage. The movie is awash in apple-pie Americana, taking place in some alternate, idealized world where nobody curses or even has an untoward thought. Maria Bello plays McLoughlin's wife, Donna, as an angelic beacon of strength, complete with eerie blue contact lenses that add to the otherworldly glow. Maggie Gyllenhaal is allowed a bit more fragility as Jimeno's wife, Allison, but even she is surrounded by a stalwart support system of family and friends.

It sounds terribly cynical to gripe about movie characters being too good, and for all I know these people really are this wonderful in reality. But a movie must be judged on strictly dramatic terms, and a little friction would've gone a long way toward making World Trade Center feel less like a glossy Hollywood product.

But Stone's masterful direction more than compensates for the screenplay's ham-fistedness. The production built a gigantic replica of ground zero on a L.A. back lot, and the director seems intent on photographing every inch of the wreckage, to chilling effect. (I daresay that TV footage and newspaper pictures were never quite able to convey the enormity of the ruins the way a giant movie screen can.) Stone figures out some expert visual tricks that put the scope of the devastation in context, and it's just so massive you can't help gasping all over again.

However, there's still the nagging question of whether this is appropriate material for an uplifting summer blockbuster. I find myself a little uneasy, sitting here typing out kudos for the technical wizardry employed to replicate the most horrible massacre of civilians in our country's history.

But in the end, I do feel the movie's intentions are pure. A blunt, unsubtle voice-over implores us to remember the way the nation pulled together in the tragedy's aftermath. Indeed, World Trade Center is full of small affecting moments of strangers reaching out to one another, peripheral characters joining in common cause regardless of background and beliefs. At a time when our country seems more ideologically divided than ever before, the film helpfully reminds us of the sense of unity we all shared on that tragic September day. iB

Lady in the Water ★
A complete narcissistic meltdown from Sixth Sense writer-director M. Night Shyamalan, this bizarre bundle of nonsense defensively bills itself as a "bedtime story," perhaps under the false assumption that children's stories are not required to make sense. The fine actor Paul Giamatti is stranded here as a sad-sack apartment-complex superintendent who discovers a mystical sea nymph (played with a chilly whisper by Bryce Dallas Howard) swimming in his crummy building's pool. An endlessly convoluted mythology involving ancient magic rituals and laughable demon wolves follows, along with the psychologically telling development that our war-torn world will soon be saved by a messianic writer, played (to his presumably everlasting shame and regret) by Shyamalan himself. Throw in the fact that the only evil character in the movie just so happens to be a movie critic, and you realize you're watching an overindulged filmmaker's egomaniacal persecution/salvation fantasy. The movie's whimsical fairy tale elements are ill-served by Shyamalan's trademark static-camera and ominous silences. Miscalculated on all fronts, Lady in the Water is a disaster. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Little Miss Sunshine ★★★½
This surprisingly trenchant family comedy was the breakout smash at this past January's Sundance Film Festival, but it's actually the kind of picture the studios should be churning out on a regular basis: warm, accessible and with a lot to say about our modern way of life. The dour and dysfunctional Hoover family hits the road in a run-down VW minibus, taking a long drive from Albuquerque to L.A. so that daughter Olive (disarming Abagail Breslin) can compete in a children's beauty pageant. From Greg Kinnear's failed motivational speaker to Steve Carell's suicidal Proust scholar, the Hoovers are all driving themselves crazy trying to live up to absurd and illusory American standards of success. (The only rational one in the bunch is Alan Arkin's foul-mouthed grandpa, and he's on heroin.) Little Miss Sunshine salutes the folks who strive for excellence and, despite their best efforts, find themselves sort of just muddling through as best they can. In other words, it's about all of us. (At Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Miami Vice ★★★½
Don't expect any pastel fashion plates or Phil Collins sing-alongs in writer-director Michael Mann's bracingly adult big-screen blow-up of his seminal 1980s TV series. Launching Crockett and Tubbs into the 21st century with nary a trace of nostalgia, Mann shoots this darker, nastier, but just as heavily stylized Vice in state-of-the-art digital video, pushing the boundaries of mainstream narrative filmmaking in cryptic, experimental new directions. The plot is standard-issue undercover cops-and-robbers double-dealing, but the visuals and sound are given a hypnotic, almost abstract quality. Colin Farrell and Jamie Foxx star as the well-dressed detectives, mumbling gruff, staccato tough-guy lines and dispatching baddies with ruthless efficiency. Chinese movie legend Gong Li costars as a high-ranking money launderer who falls into a swoony affair with Farrell's conscience-stricken Crockett. She can barely speak English, but in a film that's made up of 90 percent longing gazes, she hardly needs to. The very definition of style over substance, Miami Vice is all about the vibe: macho, heartsick and foreboding. The movie is simply mesmerizing from first frame to last. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Monster House ★★★
Executive produced by Steven Spielberg and Robert Zemeckis, this raucous, 3D computer-animated children's yarn is a throwback to ripping 1980s Amblin Entertainment adventures like Gremlins and The Goonies. With his parents away on Halloween weekend, young puberty-stricken D.J. (voiced by Michael Musso) discovers that something's not quite right with that old, run-down house across the street. Turns out, it's alive—possessed by a particularly ill-tempered spirit and prone to eating anyone foolish enough to ring the front doorbell. The animation is simply marvelous, anthropomorphizing the very unhappy home into a sinister face, complete with blinking window shades for eyes and a long red carpet that serves as something like a tongue. It's up to D.J. and his pals to venture inside and extinguish the furnace, before countless trick-or-treaters end up as lunch. I'm frankly baffled as to why any studio would release this Halloween delight in the middle of the summer, but it's one boisterously entertaining kid's flick, refreshingly devoid of the pop culture references and bathroom jokes that mar most children's entertainment these days. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest ★★½
Bogged down by blockbuster elephantitis, this noisy, seemingly endless sequel to the surprise 2003 smash is more exhausting than exhilarating. Johnny Depp returns as the roguish, strangely fey Captain Jack Sparrow, again swishing and slurring and generally stealing any scene that isn't already nailed down. Problem is, everyone who had so much as one speaking line in the bloated original has come back for more, and screenwriters Ted Elliot and Terry Rosario are so busy laying the unwieldy expository groundwork for a massive, multi-film mythology (the next sequel is already in the can, ready for release next summer) that this one takes forever and a day to get rolling. A shame, as the swashbuckling scenes are delightful Rube Goldberg set pieces, reminiscent of Indiana Jones' funniest dustups. The special effects work is also first-rate, with the great character actor Bill Nighy working wonders as squid-faced, undead pirate Davy Jones. Producer Jerry Bruckheimer and director Gore Verbinski don't seem to understand that sometimes less is more. There's a charming 100-minute entertainment buried somewhere within these two and a half fatiguing hours. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Scanner Darkly ★★
Best known for roaming, pleasantly chatty in like Slacker and Before Sunset, writer-dire Richard Linklater takes on legendary sci-fi w
Philip K. Dick's 1977 dystopian drug addic parable, using the same interpolated rotosco good old days when Woody used to rip off ma lack, rudderless comedy begins dreadfully, but ers slightly in the second half, when it abruptly away on the blithe comic riffs of star Owen n. As a lazy couch-surfer inadvertently wreck-e marriage of his newlywed pals Matt Dillon ate Husdon, Wilson makes for a lousy bad guy. awling, stoner line-readings are altogether too ring and sincere for the Jack Black-ish role of ergrown adolescent hell-raiser. Dillon is even miscast, doing a bad Ben Stiller impression as tight, sputtering yuppie worn down to his last . Perhaps directors Joe and Anthony Russo d something was amiss, as suddenly all charac-ntinuity flies out the window and the film tries ng Wilson's blissed-out layabout into an un-hero. It's a bizarre and illogical choice, but still d deal more agreeable than where the picture ally seemed headed. Cosmic Evolution

Two decades later, the Flaming Lips haven't lost their experimental edge.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

With shows that involve animal costumes, confetti, fake blood and singer Wayne Coyne rolling through crowds in a huge bubble, the Flaming Lips suggest a fun-house ride. But for Coyne and cofounder Michael Ivins, it's been more of an endless rollercoaster since they began playing psychedelic garage-punk in 1983—in the unlikely environs of Oklahoma City.

With their new album, the Flaming Lips prove that wisdom comes with age.

"Because we didn't have huge success early on, it helped us in evolving," bassist Ivins says of the group, which spawned a novelty hit in 1994 with "She Don't Use Jelly," but didn't seal a large following until 2002's mesmerizing Yoshimi Battles the Pink Robots and a joint tour with Beck. "We've just been doing our own thing and nobody's been hanging around and telling us, 'You can't do that.'"

"Everyone should question when someone says, 'You can't do that,'" he adds. "We think 'that' includes Santa Clauses and aliens and cool gadgets and space bubbles. Why not?"

"We're here with the show hopefully to put on a fun, entertaining evening, to make it worth people's while to get out of the house," says Ivins, whose group plays the Bank of America Pavilion Sept. 10, with the white-suited Coyne serving as pied piper for their interactive flock. "That's what's great about rock 'n' roll. It's a different art form from going to a museum or watching a film."

Actually, the Lips include weird film clips in their shows as well, but there'll be too much going on for fans to just watch. "We came to the conclusion that the studio and the live experience were just two different things," he says. "By the second record, we started trying to make records where we weren't concerned with how we were going to perform them, and we would worry about it later."

The records have grown as works of art since gifted multi-instrumentalist Steven Drozd joined in 1991. Not only did Drozd help execute boombox experiments that led to 1997's Zaireeka, a four-CD set where all four discs are played simultaneously on separate stereos for total effect, but he conjured the lush, orchestral synthesizer melodies that made Yoshimi and 1999's The Soft Bulletin so magical.

"At some point, we decided not to let ourselves be bound even by our own preconceived notions," Ivins says. "As we went along and met people like [producer] Dave Fridmann and Steven, we were able to move beyond, to realize ideas that maybe we weren't physically capable of actually doing. We can sit around and think of ideas all day long, and now—especially with all four of us in the studio—we can think of some way to turn these ideas into sounds."

"We're not sure what it is that we want, but we know what it is that we don't like, and we'll know what it is when it's right," he says of the Lips' recordings, where vocals, guitars and drums often sound processed as well as organic. "We'll actually sample ourselves, which is a good trick."

Such is the case with "The Yeah Yeah Yeah Song," which opens the band's latest CD, At War With the Mystics. Vocals glide and collide through talk-box effects while Coyne pops powertripping questions like "If you could make everybody poor just so you could be rich, would you do it?"

It's a timely question with sad answers, as the Lips get closer than ever to sociopolitical commentary on the CD. On "The W.A.N.D. (The Will Always Negates Defeat)," Coyne adds, "Why can't they see that's not power, that's greed."

"We do a lot of stuff that's inward-looking," Ivins says, "and we're into personal responsibility, like looking at yourself first. But you can't be an isolationist anymore. You can't sit and say none of this outside stuff matters."

At War With the Mystics also teases more musical extremes, from the Prince-like strut of "Free Radicals" to space-rock interludes that echo late-'60s Pink Floyd or Black Sabbath.

"We were doing these on-off shows and started playing 'War Pigs' by Black Sabbath," he says, "and we'd get back to the studio and try to inject some of that into the proceedings. That would naturally happen. We're pretty adamant that we don't want to make records that sound like they were made in 1969."

Sabbath, Floyd, the Who and Frank Zappa can count as early influences on the Oklahomans, along with punk mavericks the Butthole Surfers and Black Flag (as noted in the fantastic 2005 rockumentary The Fearless Freaks by Bradley Beesley, a filmmaker friend since 1992). But it wasn't until the Lips got rolling, near the end of Coyne's 11-year tenure behind the fryolator at Long John Silver's, that he and Ivins began viewing their long-term future—as a joke.

"We'd say, 'What are you doing for the next 20 years?' and we'd laugh and laugh," says Ivins, 43. "Who knew?" IB

The Flaming Lips play Sept. 10 at the Bank of America Pavilion.

And the Beat Goes On

From the musician's mouth to the IMPROPER's ear

Paul Robicheau began writing a music column in the IMPROPER's third year and hasn't missed an issue since. In the process, he's interviewed hundreds of artists, from Dave Matthews to Melissa Etheridge, from R.E.M. to Ravi Shankar. Here are some choice quotes along the way:

GUSTER'S RYAN MILLER (1995) ON HIS TRIO'S INSTRUMENTATION: "If we found a friend as a [Tufts] freshman who was a bass player, maybe we'd have one."

RADIOHEAD'S ED O'BRIEN (1997) on the band's landmark OK Computer: "Some people said it was commercial suicide, but so far, it has been our most commercial album. I think a lot of people underestimate the listening public."

MORPHINE'S MARK SANDMAN (1997) ON HIS TWO-STRING BASS: "In Treat Her Right, I just played bass lines on a guitar, really the bottom two strings—the stupid thing is why I left the others on."

GREGG ALLMAN (1998) ON HIS THEN-TWO-YEAR SOBRIETY: "When I was 30, I was addicted to everything and felt like I was 90. So I'm 50 now and feel like I'm 30."

BARENAKED LADIES' STEVEN PAGE (1999) ON IMAGE: "When you're a popular group, you lose some of the cachet that might make you kinda cool. We were never that cool anyway."

DAVID GRAY (2000): "Music is all about intuition, not knowledge. You don't want your conscious mind to start interfering and f---ing it up. Just like anything in life. You want a kiss to be a kiss, not something you've thought about."

BLACK SABBATH'S TONY IOMMI (2000) ON HIS VINTAGE GIBSON SG: "The original guitar I keep under lock and key, and it will remain there until somebody offers me $100,000 for it. Then it will go... no, I'll keep that. That's my history there."

HENRY ROLLINS (2000): "[In Black Flag], we were told punk rock bands aren't supposed to do records. Then we sold out by cutting our hair. I think people sell out when they work at McDonald's when they wanted to be mountain-climbers."

AEROSMITH'S JOE PERRY (2001): "When the lights go down and we hit the stage, it's an adrenaline rush. And it still feels the same as it did in 1973."

OUTKAST'S ANDRE "3000" BENJAMIN (2001): "We like to keep our eye to the sky and our ears to the street. Nobody cares what's going on in space if they don't know what's going on in their neighborhood. But at the same time, you don't want to stay in that neighborhood all day long."

FIONA APPLE (1997): "What has made me uncomfortable my whole life—which is the discomfort which has driven me to doing this in the public eye—is that it makes me uncomfortable to keep things inside."

TORI AMOS (2003): "So many people want to be 24 when they're almost 40, bu more people at 24 should want to be mor like 40, especially when they open their mouth."

SONNY ROLLINS (2003) ON JAZZ IMPROVISATION: "You've got to think about what you're doing up to a point, the the music takes over. The greatest aspect of playing is when the music plays itself. When I'm really playing, my mind is gone.'

AUDIOSLAVE'S TOM MORELLO (2003): "It wasn't until I was able to open up my musical head to ideas outside of traditional guitar playing—like hip-hop and techno and trash compactors and coyotes howling—that I really found my own voice."

THE PIXIES' FRANK BLACK (2004) ON DABBLING IN SPANISH LYRICS AND BIBLICAL/SCI-FI IMAGERY: "It's kinda surrealist, cut up so it doesn't even matte if you speak English. You don't have to be coming from a particular subculture. You don't have to be a punk, a nerd, an arty person or a hard-rock person. You can be any of those."

STEVE EARLE (2004): "I find it increasingl hard to write chick songs in this political atmosphere. This war in Iraq has the potential to be a thousand times worse than Vietnam."

ALICIA KEYS (2002): "I don want to ever feel like peopl will see me and say, 'Well, I know what she's going to d You never know what I'm going to do, 'cause I never know what I'm going to do.

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRI

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you we The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Morgan Holzer, Michael Comey, Linsey MacDougall and Elizabeth Mazar took this photo outside of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London, except nobody told Elizabeth.

David and Amy Nauss took a flight-seeing tour of Mount McKinley during a recent voyage to Alaska. Was it a fantastic voyage? Well, that's only for Coolio to decide.

Michael Gnazzo and Kristin Stadelmann found themselves harnessed to the very top the Bunker Hill Monument. The say the Charles smells just as bad from 221 feet up.

Roberto Sarkis Parseghian, the 2006 Ironman of Brazil, is also the star of Old Navy's new Brazilian-based ad campaign: Everyone in Spandex!

Laurie Gatnik brought us on a trip to Punta Cana, Dominican Republic. She reports that the IMPROPER enjoys long walks on the beach, building sandcastles and close encounters with bikini tops.

Ohio congressman Tim Ryan was all sm with our Bridal Guide, that is, until he reminded that he lives in Ohio.

MMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Thirty Is the New 60

To the 30-something in black at the Liquor Store on Friday, July 28, I'm sorry I don't remember your name, but you can't expect that I would. Just a friendly word to the wise: Never trust that girls in high heels, who are half your age, have intentions beyond a complimentary Stoli Blueberi and club soda. Find a more age-appropriate hangout.

—Passive Passenger

Gratuitous Guilt

To the woman who works at the Dunkin' Donuts at the intersection of Harvard Avenue and Comm. Ave., I'm sorry I didn't tip you. I needed the change for the T.

—Will Get Ya Next Time

Hot T

Me: wildly curly hair with a red peasant shirt and holding a straw cowboy hat. You: rumpled sandy-haired traveler (holding two black bags) with a nice soul-patch goatee on the Blue Line from the aquarium on July 29. The car was so sultry that my roomie wanted to switch. You grinned so knowingly and sexually that you caught my eye as I got up. I wish I could've told you that the heat still lingers.

—Melted Heart

Chicken Run

I'd like to offer a wholehearted thank you to the person who sideswiped my parked car along Faneuil Street in Brighton during the wee hours of July 4. Not only do I appreciate having to walk four blocks to my car only to discover the side-view mirror dangling from the door, but I especially love the new red racing stripe that is now affixed to the entire driver's side. If I wanted to be a real Nancy Drew, I'd scrape the paint off and match it to whatever piece of crap you undoubtedly drive. Moreover, I really love now having to drive with my head on a swivel.

—A Wreck

Newbury Nymph

You had bright, sunny hair swinging on Newbury Street. Your sublime silhouette caught me by surprise on a busy afternoon. A simple, white skirt revealed stunning legs, and a matching minimalist black top highlighted your slim waist to perfection. I was moved. Were your eyes as thrilling as your stunning physique? It took me a few looks at the reflective shop windows to unveil them with astonishment as I was following in your steps. I even had to pass ahead and fake a stop at the ice cream store to stare back at the object of my amazement. I'd never seen a grace so simple, yet so elegant. Even more promising seemed the spirit harboring this allure. I would've drowned in your eyes over champagne, had I been free that busy afternoon. Then you disappeared, so I can only recall in dreams the pursuit of this hypnotic encounter, which allows me to meet again and again in your eyes.

—Enamored on Newbury

A-Mused

I know I had a nickname for you, but I'll be damned if I can remember it. Do you? My muse. Whatever happened to you? I think I need a nice Jewish girl back in my life—one qualified to deal with my particular type of insanity. The kind of girl that's not afraid to play with fingerpaints just for fun, or send the cops to mom's house to find me when I forget to call, which I'd never do again, I promise. Drop me a line. I must owe you at least one coffee… My treat!

GUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22 are to be jolted out of whatever sense of complacency may have retained after a difficult Mercury retrograde. week, motivated Mars in your sign opposes independent us in your Pisces house of significant others. For some s, the conflict manifests as a run-in with a coworker, thers, as a mouth-dropping surprise from a partner. ecause your Mercury ruler is almost back up to speed n contact with three major planets, you should be able me up with a solution that works on a couple of levels.

BRA

TEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

rn about your career and your colleagues' opinions still carry a hefty weight, but the atmosphere at work d've changed after your Venus ruler moved from tous Cancer to bright, bushy-tailed Leo. Let's hope that ion's roar elicits the kind of attention you want and t leads to the sort of outrageous stroke of luck you're d with whenever Venus and jolly Jupiter align, as they n Aug. 22. Although you might not feel pressed, now lso be the time you're likely to get involved in political matters.

ORPIO

TOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

rmation that you're on the right path could come about me that curious Mercury in your career midheaven s along the information it's been gathering since it d covering new ground. Now that the ramifications its recent retrograde period are over, you can sit back ollect the assorted goodies due when grateful Venus cts with generous Jupiter in your sign on Aug. 22. With er Jupiter-Neptune square on the horizon, it's time to the impossible dream. But is it safe?

GITTARIUS

/EMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

k to the wiring system or a shock of recognition? way when aggressive Mars in your career midheaven es disruptive Uranus at home, an unexpected event shake the foundation of your house or uproot the tree. Astrologically speaking, it's earthquake weather. the sun's supportive trine to regenerative Pluto in your hould protect you, it wouldn't hurt to take some utions, to stock up on batteries, water and cash. Since will challenge your Jupiter ruler on Aug. 22, make that of cash.

PRICORN

EMBER 22–JANUARY 20

ry symbolizes representatives (and sales personnel), le the little guy hops from pillar to post, engaging r, Saturn and Neptune in his negotiations, you should , the information he imparts to you very carefully. r, even in suspicious Scorpio, is still an optimist. Your n ruler, even in stage-struck Leo, is the perennial t, if not an outright pessimist. Neptune is Mr. Make- e personified. Wait to see how the Saturn-Neptune ition, exact as the month ends, shapes up.

UARIUS

UARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

three planets plus the sun in Leo, your cosmic ement, it seems far-fetched to assume that you'll have ing to say that involves anyone but you. Not so. se idealistic, imaginative Neptune is in Aquarius, you could have a significant influence in what Leos, Virgos, Geminis, Capricorns, Libras and Tauruses create in the coming weeks. Since highly structured Saturn is approaching a rare opposition to nebulous Neptune, chances are you'll undergo a major change shortly after August ends.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Since chaos is a condition Pisces handle better than the rest of us, you could easily circumvent the worst of it and instead rise from the ashes of whatever negative, destructive force is out there. While the creative Leo sun in your house of work and health favors Pluto in your career midheaven, a Fish may come out smelling like a rose. Keep this in mind when nasty or horny (depending on your take) Mars in your house of allies and enemies challenges altruistic Uranus in your sign, a once-every-two-years event.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

One leg may be firmly entrenched in a stable, emotionally satisfying situation, not unlike what you experienced around your birthday. Your other leg, however, is about to tip a precarious, somewhat unusual relationship over the edge. How you keep your balance or if you even want to is the question that should be answered in about another week. Meanwhile, there's consistent work to be done and details to be attended while your energetic, ambitious Mars ruler transits virtuous Virgo through the Labor Day holiday.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

For the past four weeks, while your Venus ruler was cruising through Cancer, you may have concentrated on ordinary household matters or on an issue related to what your next address will be. Well, from now through Labor Day, as Venus transits luxury-loving Leo, you're likely to be less concerned with comfort and convenience and more interested in the impression created when folks come to your front door. The urge to embellish, to wow and make wonderful is a natural result of this annual astrological trip. Enjoy it while it lasts.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

The cradle will rock. Whether it comes tumbling down depends on what happens when take-action Mars in Virgo threatens the foundation of your solar chart as it faces unsettled Uranus at the top. Since a sudden career move is also a possibility, keep a bag packed and the gas tank full. After what seems like the longest retrograde ever, your Mercury ruler is finally venturing into uncharted territory. Over the next 10 days you'll be offered a slew of new things to think about—some of them promising, some depressing and one a figment of a vivid imagination.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

It's a given. Once you've celebrated your birthday, the Moon Child tends to take stock of what you have as well as where you are in the general roadmap of your life. Because your Leo house of assets and values is chock full this year (three planets plus the powerful sun), you're apt to dwell on financial matters far longer and more intensely than in previous summers. Relax. The worrywart component of the crustacean temperament doesn't need further encouragement. Besides, you'll have alternatives to consider soon enough.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At Make-A-Mark, top row: Scott Akerman. Second row: Gregg Nourjian; Alan Rouleau; Richard DeAgazio. Third row: George Regan and Robin Rehfield. Bottom row: Lexie Gross

AVAST, YE LANDLUBBERS!

So what do you do with a drunken sailor?

Well, one option is to invite him or her to the Courageous Sailing Center's annual Make-A-Mark gala, which was held under a giant white tent on Constitution Wharf and, in all fairness, attracted an impeccably well-behaved crowd who got, at worst, mildly squiffy.

The stunning view of the Boston skyline and a regatta provided a picturesque backdrop for the midsummer party, where many of the guests sported go-to-hell pants, whale belts and flip-flops while sipping Dark and Stormies.

Prominent among the throng: cochair Gregg Nourjian, PR powerbroker George Regan with the lovely Robin Rehfield, salty dog Scott Akerman (just back from crewing on the boat that came in second in the Newport-Bermuda Race), Ally Foundation founder Andrea Casanova and her husband, Steve Stiles, financial titan Richard DeAgazio, skipper extraordinaire Jim Chadwick and his lovely other half, Martie, new Mom Liz Perry, the delightful Lexie Gross, and one man who introduced someone by saying, "He's an old friend... but I've only known him a month." (Add rim-shot here.)

However, the evening's funniest exchange took place when a woman asked, "What do you give the man who has everything?"

To which someone responded, "Pamela Anderson?" while another added, "Either that, or penicillin."

ICE CAPADES ON ACK...

On an island where over-the-top parties are pretty much nonstop between Memorial and Labor days, one that stands out is A.J. Mleczko's Charity on Ice fundraiser for the Nantucket Ice Rink.

Hosted by the Olympic gold medalist, this weekend's worth of activities has grown to include a welcome dinner, a fishing trip, a round of golf, a celebrity hockey game and a tented gala with a live auction... not to mention more than a few cocktails.

Helping her pull off this epic hoo-ha are A.J.'s husband, pilot/adventurer Jason Griswold, her father, Tom (the island's best charter boat captain, who once hauled Jimmy Buffet out of the water), her mother, Bambi, and her brother, Jason—who are known respectively as Mad Dog, Top Dog and Lazy Dog, and who do more for the island than anyone has room to write about.

Hosting the party on his spectacular lawn overlooking the water was conservation foundation head Richard Verney, and the bold-faced names in the crowd included Patriots great Max Lane, broadcasting behemoth Greg Hill of WAAF, anchor-babe Sarah Underwood and her sportswriter husband, Michael Felger, former hockey star and current sports marketing guru Clion Daskalakis, punk rock Bruin Ian Moran, tech mogul Jord Poster and his lovely wife, Allison, North Shore bond trader Tim Everitt and his stunning other half, Carter, renowned artist Ilya Kagan, children's book author Wendy Rouillard (of Barnaby Bear fame), NHL greats Sean McEchearn and Ted Donato, gold, silver and bronze medalist Tricia Luoma and her husband, Todd, her gorgeous teammate Tara Mansey with scintillating Sperry VP Sue Dooley, sportsman and all-around great guy don Gund, Weston equestrienne Keating, financial titan Abner Ku dapper defenseman Hal Gill and the yond-gorgeous Anne, Nantucket party wart George Albrecht, the ever aff Tom Kershaw with blonde bombs Hollis Colby, banking bigwig Chad ford (Bambi's brother) with the deligh Ann, and part of their unruly brood: C nut Hillions Charlie and Betsy Giffor

Besides the hockey game—about w Greg Hill jokingly complained, " white team had 12 current NHL pla and the blue team had Andy Brickley myself"—the weekend's highlights cluded a woman bidding $100 in the auction to hug Hal Gill.

However, the funniest part of a w entertaining weekend had to be when Donato accidentally hooked Max Lar the head while they were fishing, w prompted someone to say, "Ted oughta now, 'cause he's never gonna catch thing bigger." IB

FROM THE EDITOR

NEW LOOKS

Talented fashion editor Victor Vargas took over the IMPROPER's fashion pages back in April, and in this issue he presents his first fall preview.

For our women's fashion spread, Vargas draws from the hottest collections in Boston, showing us the silhouettes, colors, fabrics and details that are most exciting this fall. While volume is in with a vengeance, embellishment is minimal, making special, rather than plain, accessories even more important. (This year, go for those baroque earrings and that ultra-high, heavy shoe.)

Meanwhile, the hippest look for men, Vargas shows us, is an artful blend of dressed up and dressed down—well-cu jackets worn with ripped jeans.

There's nothing boring about this fall' trends for both genders, which means shopping for Boston's longest seasons should be nothing but fun.

The IMPROPER's on the lookout for 10 stylish Bostonians to feature in our second annual Style issue this fall. If you know a well-dressed guy or gal with a look all their own, e-mail a photo and contact info to Leslie@improper.com by Sept. 12.

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST

I have a beef with your 15th-anniversary cover (Aug. 16). Why is Maura Tierney's beautiful face covered by your UPC bar code, while Jay Leno's ugly puss is in plain view? A little better judgment next time, please.

NEW IN TOWN

Dessert Storm

If the European Union ever carries out its plot to annex Kenmore Square, it'll be hard to claim we had no warning. Sure, the fin de siècle grand hotel happened innocently enough, as did the Parisian brasserie a few storefronts over. The French bistro down the block might've been mere coincidence. But with the arrival on the square of Truly Jörg's, a new European-style pastry shop, even staunch realists may start fearing the worst. "I wanted to make it just like a café in Europe," says chef/owner Jörg Amsler, playing right into the conspiracy theorists' hands. "Where people go on a daily basis—like they go to the butcher shop or the cheese guy. Not just for special occasions."

The Citgo sign may not suddenly read "FIFA" (at least as of press time), but otherwise Amsler has nailed the Euro feel at every turn. For one, the space is tiny: The cheery red walls, extra-high tin ceilings and strategically placed mirrors help make the most of the space, but patrons wishing to linger flâneur-style will want to grab their almond croissants and double cappuccinos and head for the 20-seat patio out front. The potted-tree perimeter seems precisely engineered for people-watching, and the fact that this particular stretch of Comm. Ave. bears a suspicious resemblance to the Champs-Elysées (broad boulevard sidewalks, diagonal orientation) only ramps up the French connection.

Inside the pastry case, too, Amsler remains true to his European roots. "You won't see me doing the American classics, like Betty Crocker cakes slathered with Crisco frosting, or slices of apple pie," he says. Prepared in the company's Saugus location (which specializes in larger family-style desserts) and delivered daily, the Boston shop's offerings mostly fall under the category Stückli—EU "code" for single-portion, one-piece treats. Fresh-berry tarts loaded with pastry cream, miniature lingonberry cheesecakes, chocolate-covered réligieuses and other one-serving items top out at $4 (that's 3.13 euros) apiece. On the savory side, miniature quiches thankfully buck cliché with inspired upscale ingredients like wild mushrooms and gorgonzola, and lunch hour brings sandwiches built on croissants.

Unnerved by the thought of Kenmore becoming the next Paris arrondissement? Consider this: Amsler, the former personal pastry chef to two staunch American patriots (George Bush Sr. and actor James Garner), does make one capitulation to the neighborhood we know today—a sweet selection of edible pro-Sox propaganda (decorated shortbread cookies) he calls "A-Rod Bites." 514 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-266-6283). —JH

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: Your family, with five musician brothers, has been called the first family of jazz. Any sord tales of sibling rivalry or parental tyranny?

Branford Marsalis: There really couldn't be—we played different instruments! My parents didn't pressu any of us. My father always said it's hard enough to be musician when you love it, it would be harder if you didn

IB: Your memories of student life in Boston—good or bad

BM: There were lots of both. It was my first real winte one of the most frightening experiences in my life, esp cially for a boy from Louisiana. I had to ask my mom send me money for a coat, and she thought it was scam—she didn't believe me when I said how cold it w here! But my time in Boston mostly was great. I got to to Fenway for the first time, which was exciting as a b baseball fan. Tickets were actually affordable in the '70s.

IB: What was your impression of the Boston music scene

BM: I didn't spend too much time around town—I w too busy learning to play. But I met significant people her I met my drummer, Jeff "Tain" Watts, at Berklee; we' been playing together for more than 25 years.

IB: You've worked with everyone from the Grateful Dead and Miles Davis to Jay Leno. Any nightmares?

BM: The nightmares are when I play bad. If I'm playi well, it doesn't matter.

IB: What's the scoop on the new album?

BM: This new CD is honestly the best so far. We tac led some tough music, and it's different from anythi we've done before.

IB: What album should every true jazz lover own?

BM: Too many to list, but I guess I could say Louis Armstrong's compilation of singles; a Billy Holiday and Lester Young compilation; and Charlie Parker's Bird With Strings.

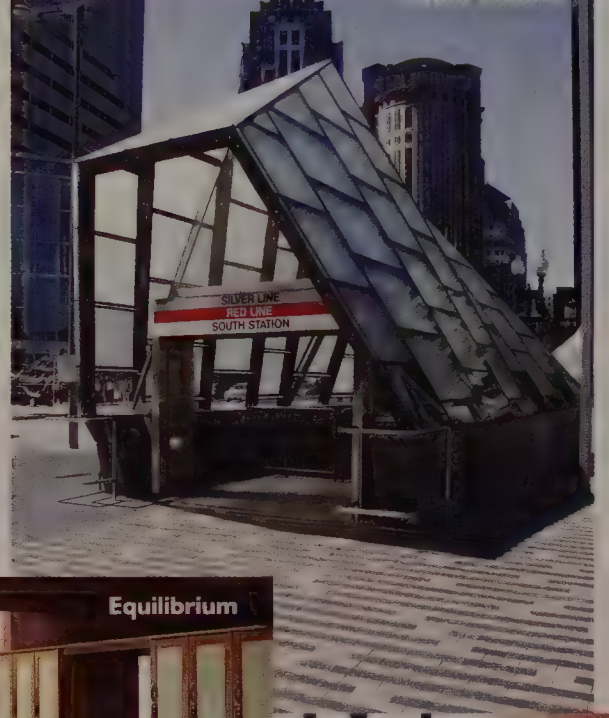
SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION



Art of Glass... T station entrances are hardly known for their visual appeal, which is why we were taken aback over the past few weeks to see the striking, supermod structures arising around the formerly plain and serviceable South Station portals. Designed by Machado and Silvetti Associates, with additional work by Domeneck, Hicks and Krockmalmic Architects, the new glass portals—or "headhouses," as they're called by those in the know—serve as utilitarian objects of urban art, providing natural light while helping travelers transfer between T lines and the train station. It's all part of the beautification of Dewey Square, says MBTA design director Barbara Boylan, who calls the structures "little gems." Summer Street and Atlantic Avenue, Boston.

Inspired by numerous trips to the Continent, Thiede hand-picks every piece, including white ceramic glazed pitchers from the Loire Valley ($180–$300); linen tablecloths, napkins and placemats ($20–$225); and fleece throws and pillows from Italy that feel like cashmere—in 35 colors ($90–$100). FASH FLASH

Heavy Metal, Begone

It's a sad, timeworn tale: You're dying to show off the latest "it" bag, but you simply can't muster the arm strength to lug it around. You're not alone. The handbag market has experienced a bit of a backlash of late, resulting in a scaling-back of clunky hardware in favor of less weighty designs. Don't fret; you'll still get your frills. While this may signal the start of a trend toward minimalism, bags remain ultra-big and enthusiastically embellished. Moxie's Jessica Lynn points to hand-stitched patterns, woven leather, pleats and tassels as indicative of fall's trend toward lighter detailing. April Riccio, of Neiman Marcus, uses the industry terms "North/South" and "East/West" to denote this season's two b bag shapes—that is, vertical versus horizontal in orie tion. In one paparazzo shot after another, you can celebutantes sporting bags bigger than their bodies, don't they look oh-so-hip? Primed for Produce... As if Barbara Lynch weren't busy enough—juggling a trio of hot restaurants (No. 9 Park, B&G Oyster, the Butcher Shop) and a catering company that's barely a year old—the chef/entrepreneur is moving on to her next project: an upscale produce shop in the South End. Plum Produce, slated to open Sept. 5 on Waltham Street (off Tremont, right next to the Butcher Shop), is meant to give home cooks access to high-end produce and other ingredients that restaurant chefs typically get much more easily. The selection will include hard-to-find items like white asparagus and fraises de bois from France, green almonds from California, rainbow chard from Manhattan and fancy braising greens from all over, as well as fresh herbs, local honey, house-made confitures and more. www.no9park.com.

Far East Heads West... Zoe's, a popular Chinese sit-down restaurant in Somerville since 1999, recently opened its second location, on Harvard Street in Brookline Village. The space, formerly home to the kosher Chinese restaurant Shalom Beijing, seats about 100 diners and offers the same menu as its sibling. But that's not to say the Brookline locale doesn't have a few unique components—among them, a $6.95 lunch buffet and weekend dim sum featuring 20 items. If you prefer to dine à la carte, most entrées run $12 or less. 92 Harvard St., Brookline (617-731-9778). Sun.-Thu., 11:30 am-10 pm; Fri. and Sa 11:30 am-11 pm.

than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

RED ALERT

Please review these heightened security measures before heading to the airport.

SA notice to travelers: Due to unfortunate circumstances in London and elsewhere, passengers will no longer owed to bring liquids or gels aboard the ft. Prohibited items include toothmouthwash, deodorant, perfume and ther personal hygiene product that help you avoid smelling like a goat. we're removing toilet paper from the booms, because you could light that on r something. And there'll be no water, se terrorists could use electrolysis to ite the hydrogen atoms from the oxynd create flammable gases. From here t, you're all going to be thirsty, smelly ncomfortable. But be advised that this the beginning, as further plots have devised that will require additional ces for the common good.

starters, Steven Seagal will no longer owed to fly in the passenger cabin of the ft. He'd simply be too dangerous if the sts were to corrupt him, and there's no ntee that an armored cockpit door prevent Mr. Seagal from taking over a if he so chose. For this reason, if Mr. wishes to fly, he'll have to ride in the area, in a large cage guarded by dogs med sentries. We're sorry for any inenience this may cause Mr. Seagal.

For this , all women will be required to remain s for the duration of the flight. Hooters e're sorry for stealing your thunder.

persons weighing more than 300 ds will be detained at security and put readmill until they fit in a normal airat. If you don't think that's fair, well, n't think it was fair that our back was d like a question mark after our recent from Philly to Knoxville because we ated next to a guy who weighed four nd caused us to lean out into the aisle for the whole flight, or else be smothered in his armpit. Seriously, he couldn't put the tray table down because his fupa was in the way. You might think this rule has nothing to do with security, but let's just say that we've uncovered a nefarious plot that involves the Fat Boys, matches and a four-burrito lunch at Taco Bell.

Baking soda volcanoes will no longer be allowed in the cabin, unless a science fair is in progress. Aborigine blowguns are prohibited in carry-on luggage. Slingshots must be placed in checked luggage or the back pocket of a precocious little scamp. Trebuchets, catapults, Trojan horses and boiling vats of tar will no longer be permitted on the plane under any circumstances, peasant uprisings included. Villagers pursuing Frankenstein's monster must check their torches and pitchforks, or simply purchase new ones at the duty-free store upon disembarking.

In an unprecedented cross-industry security move, Logan Airport will work closely with the Rack in an attempt to bring passenger ID verification up to the high standards employed by Faneuil Hall bouncers. The reasoning: If you want to get into the Rack on a given night, your ID is scanned into a machine that verifies its authenticity; if you want to get on a plane, you flash your ID to a bored-looking security worker and go on your way. It's a radical idea, but we think that, with time, we can apply the same amount of energy to stopping terrorists as we do to preventing 20-year-old BU girls from drinking Tequiza. That's why the Rack will now be running Logan security. Remember, Fast Freddy from Mix 98.5 is broadcasting live from Terminal B, every Saturday night! Travelers should be aware that, effective immediately, proper casual attire is required—no sneakers, hats, T-shirts or work boots.

Reptile owners and enthusiasts, be advised that there are no motherf---ing snakes on this motherf---ing plane.

In addition to asking if a stranger has given you any luggage to carry, ticket agents will also say, "Aterroristssayswhat?" Anyone who replies, "Huh?" "Come again," or "I caaun't hear you, I've got an ear infuction" will be allowed to collect their boarding passes, as their understanding of this dated reference from Wayne's World implies a cultural understanding that predates all known sleeper cells. Anyone who says "What?" will be told to proceed to Gate 69, as their plane boards when monkeys fly out my butt. iB

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

THE RUNNING MAN

After an off year in 2005, the Pats will be chillin' with Dillon.

The sting of last season's loss in Denver that ended the Patriots' dreams of a three-peat still lingers. ecially given what we know now: that a diocre Pittsburgh Steelers team—who ld have had no chance of beating the iots in Foxboro in late January—ended s Super Bowl champs. Tom Brady says still sick over it, to the point that he's sed to address last season. Like most iots fans, I feel the same way; we'd er just forget that 2005 ever happened look ahead to this season.

et here we were a week into camp, and Patriots already had a Who's Who of ers on the dreaded physically-unable-to-orm list: Richard Seymour, Dan Kop- Rodney Harrison, rookie wideout Chad son. And this was before we learned that y Bruschi had broken his wrist and ht miss the season opener. The heart and missing his second training camp in a ? What was going on around here?

LEARLY, THE UNNING BACK OLDS THE KEYS TO NY SUPER BOWL RIVE.

omehow, almost magically, they all got he physically-able-to-perform list in a ter of days. The black cloud, which started to look like a curse, was lifted. nd then I realized I was stressing over ning. These are the kinds of things that pen every summer. Guys get hurt; the iots find a way to win anyway; and I better. I also realized there are more se- s obstacles this season if the Patriots to play up to their potential. The big- issue, in my eyes, is the looming show- n at running back.

low is Corey Dillon going to do in 6? Is he 100 percent healed? Is he ready arry the load again? And maybe the est question: Can a guy as distin- hed (and outspoken) as Dillon handle petition for his job?

illon has all but been named as the ter, but I still have to wonder whether presence of Laurence Maroney, the Pa- ts' first-round pick, is going to be a d or bad thing for the veteran.

The fact that Bill Belichick called Dillon before making the Maroney pick says a lot about what he thinks of the his star running back. Dillon is Belichick's kind of player, one of those north-south runners who's made a living on yards after contact. But how do we think Dillon felt when Belichick made that call to his starting tailback?

Ring ring! [Actually, it was probably a ringback tone. Belichick and Bon Jovi are boys, so I'd guess that Bill's phone plays "Livin' on a Prayer."]

Corey: "Hi, coach. What's up?"

Coach B: "Corey, we're going to draft some insurance—you know, just in case. We're going to draft another running back."

Corey: "All right coach, if that's what you need to do. Which round?"

Coach B: "Well Corey, I'm thinking if everything falls right… we're maybe using a… a first-rounder."

Corey: "Oh hell, is this your way of saying I'm done?!"

Coach B: "It is what it is."

Dillon's 31, which in NFL years is about 61, and he's coming off the worst season of his career. He's logged a lot of carries, and some wonder if he's taken 100 too many. But we saw Brady in top form last year, and it just wasn't quite enough. Clearly, the running back holds the keys to any Super Bowl drive.

Enter Maroney, the Golden Gopher from Minnesota, who's without a doubt the quickest-footed running back on the team, and maybe in Patriots history.

To this point, the "competition" between Dillon and Maroney has been more like a love-fest. The rookie calls Dillon a cool dude and the vet calls Maroney "a fast learner."

Maybe these guys are really both cool with sharing the success. Maybe Dillon will teach this kid the ropes, like a good teammate should, realizing that Maroney might make Dillon better, too.

I believe Dillon will return to greatness this season. But I also believe Maroney was the right pick—that his presence will make Dillon and Brady better, too.

Dillon needed a little boot in his rear end here in New England, and now he's got it. My guess is that Dillon, and all Patriots fans, will be better off for it.

And just in case he isn't, an insurance policy called Laurence Maroney isn't a bad thing. iB

L.A. Stories

Do you have the guts to go where nobody knows your name?

Bostonians are quick to dismiss Los Angeles, preferring to sing the praises of San Francisco, because s so much like Boston." It's safe to love ı Francisco, difficult to love L.A. But if ı want to understand America—our rming and striving and willingness to go ere (unlike at Cheers) nobody knows ır name—then L.A., not New York, is place to be.

t's said that all Americans have two ·inesses: their own, and the movies. I ieve this, having almost moved my ıily to L.A. once. I'd been hired by an ependent producer to adapt the best- er The Money Game into a film. The ducer was a movie fanatic and a store- ıse of old-time Hollywood lore. "The at Samuel Goldwyn," he told me, "was ıous for his malapropisms. When he sailing to Europe, while waving to his nds on shore, he yelled to them, 'Bon age!'" The producer also told me about ldwyn's decision to buy the rights to a cking novel. It was The Well of Lone- ss, a story of lesbian love. Goldwyn ln't read it, only heard of its popularity. ıy it," he ordered his junior producers. e juniors were terrified of failing Mr. ldwyn. They appointed the youngest to ak the bad news. "You can't make The l of Loneliness, Mr. Sam," he said.

Vy not?" Goldwyn asked in his ac- ted cadence.

It's about two lesbians," the young man ied.

Goldwyn thought about this. "Don't ry about it," he finally said. "In the ie we'll make 'em Americans."

tephen, my producer, was right out of classic Hollywood novel The Day of Locust. He looked like a young, heav- Dylan Thomas, with mounds of curly k hair and a grin that said, "Trust me your credit cards—all of them." He focused on becoming rich and fa- us, and he was so charming I got ed into the dream. Stephen's produc- company consisted of Stephen and business partner, Liam, an Irish actor sported to L.A. to find his fame and une. He'd played the infamous Irish wright Brendan Behan in several ductions, and he seemed to be the liv- embodiment of Behan, spouting lines is ordinary speech, claiming to charm coyotes from the canyons and chan- ng all the great Irish actors from the . We laughed whenever he opened mouth.

I felt lucky to be in their company, from drinking pitchers of margaritas and eating in down-and-out East L.A. joints to sitting in Stephen's Volkswagen Bug at the top of Mulholland Drive at 2 am looking at the magical lights miles below, spreading out forever. "This is what the struggle's about, baby," he'd say to me. "Living above the lights, name above the title. Come through for me, baby, this is where you'll be pooping through silk." It was tough not to be seduced, particularly if you remember the absurdity of life.

Once, in the mid-'80s, I had a breakfast meeting with the Zucker brothers (producers of Airplane! and Ruthless People) and one of my heroes, Mel Brooks. The three were interested in filming my book, Sex and Money. Everyone was oblivious to my input. But every few minutes, Brooks, doing constant shtick, would turn to me and say, "Don't worry, kid, we'll take care of you." One of the Beach Boys walked by, stopped and said, "I don't care what you're doing. Can we do the music?" I started to open my mouth and Brooks shushed me. "Don't worry, kid, we'll take care of you."

This spring my wife and I went back to L.A. for business and some R&R. I knew we were in Los Angeles when the first license plate we saw leaving the airport, on a silver 6 Series BMW convertible, read "OYGEVALT." (That's Yiddish for "Oh my god!")

Later, at the Bel Air pool, the chaises were full. Everyone there had an iPod, a copy of Vanity Fair, the Hollywood Reporter, a Blackberry, a cell phone and a designer water bottle. I asked the man next to me in his shades whether he was in the biz.

"God, no," he said. "I'm in private equity in Manhattan—a real business."

Right. Nothing changes out there except the buzzwords and the players.

Hoping someone would call me on my own cell phone, I watched a young woman (who looked amazingly like Penélope Cruz) swim a few laps, climb out of the pool and, right next to me, pull on a pair of grey sweatpants. Her butt was just at my eye level, and I couldn't help noticing the words printed across her sweats: "Hang Loose."

I was trying to. IB

Soroff ON

JIM BRAUDE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Award-winning broadcaster Jim Braude hosts the news-analysis program NewsNight With Jim Braude on New England Cable News. Born and raised in Philadelphia, he graduated from Penn and received a law degree at NYU. He began his career as a legal services lawyer in the South Bronx and served as the first president of the National Union of Legal Services, which he was instrumental in founding. After relocating to the Bay State, he was the executive director of the Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts, a tax reform group, from 1987 to 1996, and he served as a Cambridge city councilor from 1999 to 2000. In addition to his television program, he is a talk radio host at 96.9 FM with the Boston Herald's Margery Eagan. He previously hosted NECN's Talk of New England in the 1990s, for which he won an Emmy. He lives in Cambridge.

Jonathan Soroff: You were trained as a lawyer. Is that your biggest asset as an interviewer?

Jim Braude: Well, it is an asset, although I haven't done much with my law degree in the intervening 30 years. As a lawyer, you're taught a certain perverse way to think and you're taught to thrive on confrontation, and I think both those things have carried through with everything I've done.

JS: You organized the first legal services workers' union in the country. Are you a Woody Guthrie type, stickin' it to the man?

JB: That's how I like to see myself—this land is my land.... Actually, it's odd, because I organized people you don't generally think of as "workers"—lawyers, paralegals, that kind of thing.

JS: Are you in a union now?

JB: No. I work in two non-unionized workplaces.

JS: Ever think about pulling a Norma Rae?

JB: Very rarely. I've heard the H word applied to my behavior, meaning hypocrite.

JS: Like Ann Coulter?

JB: We discussed having her on and decided not to.

JS: Is she the Antichrist?

JB: No. I don't think she really believes any of the crap she spews. That doesn't make it any less offensive. I think she's one of the most skillful, manipulative and entrepreneurial businesswomen I've ever seen in media. It doesn't make her venom any less offensive, but I know who the true believers are on the right, and she ain't one of 'em.

JS: Three adjectives to describe your show?

JB: Smart, funny and short.

JS: Can you believe you get paid to do what the rest of the world does at cocktail parties?

"I ASKED RUDY GIULIANI HOW HE FELT ABOUT HAVING INVENTED THE COMB-OVER."

JB: No. We get paid rather well to talk, which is what I was doing before the checks started coming, so there's not a week where I don't say to someone, "I can't believe I make a living doing this."

JS: You were in politics. What was the sleaziest thing about it?

JB: Well, my only elected office was Cambridge city council...

JS: But in politics, it gets sleazier the lower the stakes become.

JB: I can't believe you said that—you preempted me! I was going to say there's an inverse proportion between the level of the office and the sense of self-importance of the person filling the office. And I should be clear: I was no less guilty than my colleagues. But I've always been in and around electoral politics, and I thought for a minute about running for governor in 1994, which would've been a complete blowout disaster, but I had a taste and I'm proud to say I retired undefeated. [Braude never ran for reelection.]

JS: How many newspapers do you read?

JB: I hate people who say what I'm about to say, but I read pieces of a lot, because of the Internet. I'm not some big intellectual. I did it before I got paid to do it, and I still do because it's my job, and it's a helluva lot of fun. I'm completely news obsessed. Don't ask me the last book I read, because I can't remember. I read newspapers and magazines.

JS: Favorite source of Internet gossip?

JB: I often tell this story. Straight men like me will occasionally go into a lesbian chat room, allegedly to do research, and then after listening to the discourse for a while, you're convinced that it's all straight men in the lesbian chat room trying to pass themselves off. But to answer your question, I read every blog I can find, and I'm a Drudge addict like everyone else.

JS: Biggest "get" you've ever had as an interviewer?

JB: My producer got me half an hour with Jane Fonda, which was as much fun as one can have sitting down.

JS: Were you fantasizing about her as Barbarella, the hooker in Klute, or the workout videos?

JB: It's funny you say that. In my opening question to her, I mentioned that on my dorm room wall in college, there were not one but two Barbarella posters.

JS: Toughest question you ever had to ask?

JB: I asked Rudy Giuliani how he felt about having invented the comb-over.

JS: Stupidest question you ever asked?

JB: I'm a pretty good listener, but occasionally I do zone out, and I know that in more than one instance, I've asked a question that the interviewee has already answered.

JS: Most awkward moment in broadcasting?

JB: I had Tom Menino's director of homeland security on, and during an eight-minute interview his cell phone rang eight times. He never seemed to get that maybe he should have shut it off.

JS: Most intimidating person you've ever interviewed?

JB: I rarely get nervous, but I must admit that I was hyperventilating before the Jane Fonda interview.

JS: Let's discuss Nancy Grace. Should h middle name be "Dis?"

JB: [She's a] loser. I admire those p who can mix news with entertain and there are quite a few, but she's thetic creature as far as I'm concerne

JS: How about Larry King. Should he p it in?

JB: I think he already has. Just look questions he asks.

JS: CNN or Fox?

JB: CNN in a walk, although just like ple are drawn to car wrecks, I trawl right-wing talk radio and television fo sons I can't quite describe.

JS: Is Margery Eagan a bleeding-heart lib

JB: No. She calls 'em like she sees She's really a triple threat: the fun smartest woman on talk radio (of c she's the only woman on talk radio she's also the most versatile, tal columnist in town, and she's just a lous person.

JS: Do you think Jay Severin believes a that comes out of his mouth?

JB: I pride myself on having "right dar," or whatever you wanna call it. spot a real believer as opposed to a p mance artist, and I find it hard to b that anyone who's really smart, whi is, can be as knuckle-dragging as he sionally is.

JS: Describe your own political leanings

JB: Well, I hate the word liberal, be it seems sort of weak-kneed to me. I I'm one of the P's: a progressive, a ulist, a pain in the ass, or some p might say pathetic. But I'm defini big-government guy.

JS: Any plan to run for office?

JB: No. Never again. Running wa but serving was a whole other issue.

JS: What's your dream job?

JB: I've got it. IB

Dreamers

BY VICTOR VARGAS. PHOTOGRAPHED BY PAUL ARESU

For fall 2006, a new sensibility has emerged. Gone are the days of maximalism, over-the-top embellishment and superfluous adornment. Witness the return of the assertive, serious and sexy woman.

Miuccia Prada epitomizes that point of view this season with her leopard-print coat with fur sleeves, mostly short proportions and signature platforms. Stefano Pilati of Yves Saint Laurent also echoes this feeling with form-fitting tunics, leather blouses, PVC trench coats and a revised shorter version of his directional tulip skirt. At the Milan shows, Versace, a house that has always celebrated strong women, sent out a parade of stunning designs, many of which were finished in patent leather—including chinchilla and astrakhan coats. The accessories? Knee-high boots in patent leather (yet again) and multi-strapped bags with silver hardware. Translation: Get a new coat, one with a bit of swing to it—think '60s, preferably with patent leather accents, paired with wool leggings and towering platform shoes or dominatrix-ish boots (leave the riding crop at home, please).

With so many designers currently citing Cristóbal Balenciaga as a major influence, Nicolas Ghesquière created a collection for the House of Balenciaga with updated variations that run the gamut of Cristóbal's 30-year career. Short tweed suits with stand-up collars, 3-D bubble skirts and utterly modern dresses capture the spirit of the moment. Heavy platform shoes and tall hats lend the look a powerful presence.

At Lanvin, designer Alber Elbaz makes several references to Balenciaga and Yves Saint Laurent, among others. He shows flounced tent coats and dresses, tuxedo-inspired eveningwear and his signature party dresses and ornate jewelry.

The Rochas collection features of-the-moment skinny tailoring, puffy-skirted cocktail dresses and suits and, of course, romantically beautiful gowns. (Sadly, this was Olivier Theysken's last collection for the house, as it's now closed.) All of this points to the continuing trend of puffiness, with a new silhouette added to the mix: the trapeze or A-line. Some might think it not a slimming look, but as long as you allow it to move, it's both modern and flattering, as most of the new dresses and coats are cut close to the body at the top.

For those who love the great outdoors in winter, this season offers an array of warm options. Ralph Lauren, black V-neck dress with leather puff sleeves, by Prada, $1,945; animal-print T-strap high-heel shoes in pony skin fur, by Yves Saint Laurent, $650. Both at Saks Fifth Avenue.

Marc Jacobs and Michael Kors all have tartans in various incarnations. Kors' version is of the usual preppy-chic variety we've all come to love, featuring above-the-knee coats, short-sleeve mini dresses and the season's ubiquitous wide-leg pant. Lauren offers the most luxurious version, with strapless silk taffeta dresses and gowns. Marc Jacobs switches gears once again, with oversized sweaters (down to the knee), strapless flannel dresses worn over pants, and a sea of coats, capes and shawls. For evening, he shows the best distressed, sequined dresses of the season.

The fiercely fashion-forward among us have plenty of cause for celebration. Several of this season's major trends are suited to making a statement. Volume, the most exciting trend, comes in a multitude of forms. There are huge skirts at Viktor & Rolf—multitiered, electro-plated and ruffled, again with a nod to Christian Dior's 1947 look. At Chloe, volume comes in the form of baby doll–like dresses, and Alexander McQueen's bubble skirts and dipped-hem evening gown are showstoppers for any event. Louis Vuitton's hot pink wide-leg velvet pants and large flannel hats are also sure to get you noticed. If you're into prints, the animal-print craze that started a few seasons ago is still very much alive for fall, with some of the best cropped vests in fur or animal-print dresses at Roberto Cavalli, a decadent leopard-print fur coat at Oscar de la Renta and a bevy of shoes, bags and accessories at Prada and Yves Saint Laurent, among others. It may seem like we're inundated by all things in shades of purple this season, but the big news is actually red: in glamorous eveningwear at Valentino and Givenchy, in coats everywhere from Dolce & Gabbana to Christian Lacroix and in printed dresses and ball skirts at Louis Vuitton and Carolina Herrera.

Last but not least is a trend that's been part of the fashion lexicon for many a season. This fall it's called Napoleonic, and it's military at the core. Dolce & Gabbana showed an entire collection comprising military coats, high-collared shirts, baroque flourishes, rich velvets, riding boots and gold. (Gold is the metal or color of choice for hardware this fall, as it's complementary to many of the hues and fabrics in current circulation.) The Napoleonic look also made high-profile appearances at Jean Paul Gaultier, Fendi and Chanel. This look is probably the easiest to emulate on a budget. You can find military-inspired jackets at the mall and vintage shops, although you'll probably have to splurge on boots.

Fall is always more exciting for fashion simply because of the sheer number of options available, and this season will definitely not disappoint. Happy shopping!

This season's menswear showcases a daring mix of classic luxury and urban edge—elite meets street.

Right: off-white sweater with zebra stripes, $325; black wool straight-leg pants, $320. Both by Emanuel Ungaro at Riccardi.

This fall, men's fashion finally hits the dressed-up stride that for women started two seasons back. One look at the international men's collections spells it out: Dress up, but keep it cool. It's all part of this year's trend of unexpected combinations—upscale items paired with down-market looks from the street. At Italian design house Dsquared2, the look materializes in a close, cropped, fitted jacket paired with distressed jeans, while Ralph Lauren gives us patchwork jackets in traditional menswear fabrics (herringbone, houndstooth, glen plaid, etc.) with well-worn chinos and sockless wingtips. Velvet blazers work best when dressed down with a well-designed T-shirt—check out DKNY—or mixed with grey flannel and a denim shirt—Michael Kors.

At other houses, luxury reigns: Gianfranco Ferre offers crocodile coats trimmed in fox, monochromatic suits and cashmere sweaters, and a modern collared tuxedo that's the last word on elegance. In Paris, Hedi Slimane for Dior Homme showed almost an entire collection devoted to "Le Smoking"—that's French for tuxedo—sending out one beautifully rendered variation after another. Meanwhile, Prada has some of the hippest animal-print shirts in years, and belts and bags printed with mythological griffins.

In keeping with the gothic mood of the women's collections, Gucci's fall menswear has poetic pieces ranging from flowing voile shirts with ruffles or lace sleeves to dramatic coats with dipped hems and pleated backs for extra volume—all in a sea of black, of course. At Dolce & Gabbana, one of the best looks combines velvet jackets and vests, with expertly cut pants or jeans and golden baroque belts. There are also plenty of options for the rock-star at heart. Junya Watanabe features an explosive combination of military and punk which is best exemplified in a desert tan three quarter fitted coat with snug camouflage pants and boots. At Burberry, designer Christopher Bailey offers sharply tailored suits and coats in luxurious and sometimes traditional fabrics, but gives them all an edge with studded belts, pointed-toe boots and knit caps. His most elegant evening look: a fur-trimmed coat with a ruffled shirt and bow tie.

It's a season of contrasts with an array of options for men. To update your look, get your hands on a structured jacket, preferably cropped. If you don't already have a pair of distressed jeans, invest in one that fits you well—skinny or straight leg, not boot cut. You'll also need a pair of wingtips: Try dark brown or burgundy rather than predictable black. Look for a belt with a gold buckle—you can wear a black one, even if your shoes are of a different color. When adding to your dress shirt collection, consider a patterned one with a white collar and cuffs—they're naturally dressy but look fresh when dressed down with jeans. Look for coats in traditional fabrics and a fitted silhouette. Finally, take care not to go in any one direction full-throttle. When in doubt, mix it up.

FAMILIAL TERRITORY

With their upstairs/downstairs Newbury Street boutiques, Riccardo Dallai Sr. and son, Riccardo Jr., dress everyone from wealthy Brahmin to edgy generation next.

BY VICTOR VARGAS PHOTOGRAPHED BY TONY SCARPETTA

ver since opening the Newbury Street boutique Riccardi in 1978, Riccardo Dallai Sr. has made it his mission to keep Boston fashionistas clad in the latest European styles, from Comme des Garçons to Dolce & Gabbana to Diesel. (In fact, he opened the country's first Diesel boutique in 1994.) Last year, his son, Riccardo Jr., headed downstairs from Riccardi to open Relic, which specializes in edgier denim looks. The IMPROPER's Victor Vargas caught up with father and son to get their take on Boston's fashion savvy and the forecast for fall.

Victor Vargas: Riccardo, your store has been around for almost 30 years. How have you seen Bostonians' attitudes about fashion change in the last 10? Have they become less conservative?

Riccardo Dallai Sr.: I think Bostonians are conservative, but with a twist. Boston's always been affected by this great international crowd. And people have been traveling more than ever before, and adjusting to an international sense of style.

Riccardo Dallai Jr.: What I've found is that they're becoming more daring, [like] combining a funky pair of jeans and a T-shirt with a really cool blazer. That's really a change, and I think it's been a positive one. There've been a lot of outside influences—traveling, the media, girlfriends informing boyfriends—with a lot of retailers guiding the way.

VV: How would you describe the Riccardi philosophy?

Sr.: More than anything else, to find things that are exclusive. When somebody wears something from our store, they should feel special.

Jr.: But at the same time, it's really knowing your customers and working with them. A lot of our employees have been here [long enough] to build a rapport with customers, so that when a person comes back, they're working with the person who sold to them for the past few seasons. At other boutiques, you find new faces every month. It's nice to have some consistency.

VV: Riccardo, you carry a lot of Italian lines. What makes you decide to go to other capitals of fashion?

Sr.: For a long time, especially in women's fashion, Paris has been the most important source for new designers and fashion houses. But over the past few years there's been a very strong change in terms of the young American designers. New York and Los Angeles have put a dent in the international fashion industry.

VV: What cities are hot right now for buying?

Sr.: Milan is a very important source. But Paris is still on top, and New York is another very important source.

VV: Tell us about the fall trends f men and women.

Sr.: For men, it's cleaning u dressing up. Women are goin oversized knitwear. Also, a boots and oversized bags. But away your boot cuts.

Jr.: I'll go into denim: clean, mal, straight, fitted—for both and women.

VV: Riccardo Jr., you focus on d How did that come about? And w did you decide to open a denim boutique?

Jr.: Well, when you have a that a lot of people consider the more influential people United States in terms of de especially bringing in certai nerstones of premium denir Diesel, Replay, Energie, Miss even Goldy, back in the '80s—you're more or less th into it. When I graduated fro lege and started really partici in the business, there was an sion of L.A. denim, so it was i tant for my father and mys work together to provide a wi riety of styles and fits, because what people are looking fo can have 15 brands, and t gonna still find five that you have, so you always have t new, innovative lines.

VV: Is the customer at Relic diff from the Riccardi customer?

Jr.: At the beginning, there wa ger overlap. Now Relic seem getting more customers who w go into Riccardi. Due to the pr cater to a wider variety of peop don't push for more than $30 pair of jeans. We still have ou end pieces, that are more sp even zip-ups with crystals or t the majority of it is for a wide ence. At the same time there's overlap. A lot of people find cool T-shirt downstairs [at Reli go to Riccardi and put it with & Gabbana blazer that costs and a pair of PRPS jeans that a to be $345. There's this tr putting together higher end an end; there's no real middle anymore. Uptown is downtown

VV: In the past, people in their 40s, early 50s, wouldn't feel comfortable going into a store lil Relic. Do you think that's chang now?

Jr.: One hundred percent. used to be an older custom would never have been caug in jeans, but because deni placed the trouser, you can really dark pair of jeans fo something person. They're themselves comfortable w idea. Our goal is to be abl anyone.

CALLING A SPADE A NEAR-KATE

Almoda (Meadow Glen Mall, 3850 Mystic Valley Pkwy, Medford; 781-391-1430) sells knockoff purses and luggage.

Prada? Yada yada yada... The real thing, in the realm of purses, is desperately expensive, and that cuts down on having several. But these stylish, fun and frisky knockoff purses, knocking around closely in the footsteps of Louis Vuitton, Prada, Burberry and Kate Spade, cost around $29–$45, inviting multiple indulgences. Expect to see a little springtime of colors—pinks, greens and blues, some with buckles, others sporting little flowers—decorating these fashionable, smallish bags. Or you can find a sophisticated bag in blood-red ersatz crocodile. One line is covered in subtle, sandy-brown Egyptian drawings. Another shows Marilyn Monroe, all sequined and bosomy, smiling forth realistically; a worried I Love Lucy and a romping Betty Boop adorn others. Of course, you can also find black cloth bags with a hint of shimmer and fun, but big enough to tote around that barge of work. Alternatively, grab the teeny cupcake ones—so bejeweled and toy-like they look like they leaped out of a Rococo painting. They're a real accessory, like earrings, for clubbing or just generally showing off. Almoda also carries duffel bags and very reasonable upright luggage (on wheels, of course). One, 32 inches tall and only $55, has impressively expandable compartments.

WHEELS OF WORTH

Wheelworks (480 Trapelo Road, Belmont; 145 Elm St., Somerville; 617-489-3577) sells high-tech bicycles and hand-crafted ones made by co-owner Peter Mooney. The Belmont location also offers repair classes and bike rentals.

In a bike store that's simply gigantic and filled to the brim with every sort of bike imaginable—from the commuting cyclist's beast of burden to exciting tandem bikes, on up to whooshingly high-tech (and high-priced) racing bikes whose thin wheels look like they're rushing by in a dream—it's inspiring to see also the handmade bicycles of Peter Mooney. Peaceful and dignified as an old-time craftsman, as well as a bike racer himself, Mooney is the steel deal, committed to fashioning his bike frames with high-quality steel tubing and hand-cut lugs. Along with their strength and structural virtue, they are beautiful to behold, ornamented with distinctive detail, almost resembling a knight's armor. Bronze-brazed in subtle lines, these lugs enable him to use lighter tubing to keep the weight down. One recent custom bike was painted a distinctive g and the buyer reported dreaming that the bike was encrusted with jewels—no doubt a metapho its aesthetic value. Thanks to the lugs, the bikes wear well and repair more easily than those welded bike parts.

ABOUT FACE

Jamaica Plain's Cafe D stands out with its new approach to classically casual dining.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL IVINS

Doug Organ opened Arbor, a splendid little restaurant on Centre Street in Jamaica Plain, more than three years ago. He aimed high in terms of ambience and cuisine, and, in my view, he hit his target. Unfortunately, although Arbor played to full houses on weekends, patronage lagged on weekdays. Organ concluded that he may have aimed a bit too high, and that Arbor's refined and upscale ambience and prices had made him too dependent on dining cognoscenti from outside JP, at the cost of attracting a loyal and steady stream of neighborhood patrons.

So Organ went back to the drawing board, and Cafe D was born. In terms of décor, Cafe D has moved away from the chic Manhattan look of Arbor—the restaurant equivalent of a black cocktail dress with stiletto heels—toward something more analogous to "business casual": smart but comfortable. Wall hangings now include a huge mirror with an ornate wooden frame painted gold and a series of canvas panels painted with semi-abstract representations of various foods. A large blackboard, which displays evening specials, enhances the casual look. An eclectic array of light fixtures hangs from the ceiling, and mini spots on tracks illuminate the artwork. The best table in the house may be the one in front of the bay window to the left of the entrance, next to a large landscape triptych depicting a single stone house in what looks like the French countryside. The front part of the restaurant seats about 45 diners, while the bar and four high cocktail tables in the rear seat another 18.

Cafe D's menu (which changes seasonally) is as varied as the lighting fixtures, with an array of starters, salads, incidentals and main courses that transform Arbor's Mediterranean orientation into a "global kitchen." Moroccan medjool date and orange salad ($8.50) featured fresh, crisp shards of young romaine lettuce, sliced almonds, chopped dates, red onions, green olives and preserved lemon in a tasty olive oil–based dressing accented with mint. Only the segments of oranges, which to me tasted canned, detracted from this lovely dish. From across the Strait of Gibraltar, the ajo blanco ($7.50) both pleased and provoked the palate. This white garlic soup, an Andalusian gazpacho, combined assertive garlic, green grapes, spicy chili oil and crunchy croutons in a broth made thick by a puree of bread and ground almonds, so filling that it could have served as the main course. I found it impossible to stop eating this deliciously piquant gruel until I realized I had arrived at the bottom of the large white bowl in which it arrived. A fish taco ($6.50 for one; $12.50 for two) betrayed Organ's San Diego origins. Evocative of the Baja Peninsula, this crisp-crusted, flaky fried pollack came on two authentic, soft corn tortillas with pico de gallo, black beans, crunchy white cabbage and radish slices, all moistened with a heady chipotle aioli.

Moving to pasta, I enjoyed the pappardelle ($14.50), a generous bowl of broad house-made noodles with four compact, robustly flavored lamb meatballs in a rich marinara sauce that combined tart-sweet tomatoes and savory-sweet onions. For risotto, the Sicilian specialty arancini ($8.50) brought three fried-rice croquettes: round in shape (larger than golf balls but smaller than tennis balls) with a mélange of shredded duck confit, Fontina cheese and sage, served with a well-construc tomato sauce. The dish on which arancini arrived was particularly hot, sumably to keep them warm, an unne sary expedient in light of the alacrity which my party consumed them.

Other appetizers included the semo fried calamari with lemon and caper ($8.50). These impeccably hot, fresh, te ringlets and tentacles of squid, quickly with ultrathin slices of lemon and jala peppers, went almost as fast as the aran The least successful of the appetizers, tartare ($9.50), suffered from insipid fl (despite the capers, chopped olives and meant to enliven it) and lackluster pres tion—a homely clod of beef alongside thin slices of toast. It lacked anything to it kick and distinction.

Of the main courses, a special evening of roasted sea scallops ($19 produced three carefully cooked large lops of velvety texture in a particularl licious Moroccan charmoula sauce, cumin, fresh coriander, smoked pap lemon and olive oil. One of my fav dishes, duck confit ($17.50), reminde of Arbor's cassoulet, which failed to the cut in the transition to Cafe D. the confit was classic, with succulent der flesh and crisp skin. Two large cu (the duck's drumstick attached to thigh) made a generous, satisfying while the green lentil accompaniment stituted for the white beans of the lamented cassoulet. Most Cafe D courses come with a choice of two dishes, of which the garlic-and-l spinach and the roasted cauliflower em as standouts.

Cafe D's pork and lamb were less cessful. The T-bone pork chop ($18 described by the waiter as very thick juicy, turned out to be disappoint thin and dry, far from medium rare dered, and topped with a cloyingly onion marmalade. Perhaps I was c disappointed because of my fond m ries of the pork loin chop serv Arbor: thicker, juicier, more tende full-flavored, and not obscured overly sweet sauce. Similarly, the M can spiced lamb, at $22.50 the pr item on the menu, seemed tough an Partially rescued by an exotic ar

A good-sized piece of moist non in a lively vinaigrette, it came h slender spears of perfectly textured aragus and mashed potatoes. If only mashed potatoes had not been used as latform for the fish, the dish would e been perfect.

Desserts at Cafe D included "rice pud- g brûlée" ($7.50) made with Italian naroli rice. This hybrid of crème brûlée rice pudding featured lively, semi-tart ed cherries, which contrasted with the amy, subtly sweet and pleasantly starchy lding. Lemon semi-freddo ($7.50) with wberries and rhubarb presented a cross ween custard and ice cream—cold and reshing like ice cream, while rich and amy like custard—and again presented ood pairing of sweet creamy custard h tangy, pleasantly tart fruit.

Among Cafe D's attractions are its af- dable wines. Half-liter carafes at $14 er varieties that change from time to ne. On one of my visits, the carafe red s a monestrel, a grape grown in the uth of France and Spain, which in this se produced a full-bodied, fruity wine h good acidity that stood up well to the od. On a subsequent night, the carafe red was an '03 Oakley Five Reds, a blend of syrah, mourvedre, zinfandel, alicante and petit syrah, also rich and full-bodied, with a good acidity and tannic backbone that prevented it from becoming heavy or flabby, as too many wines from Europe's hot and sunny south can be.

Consistent with its mission to provide a pocketbook-friendly place where locals can congregate and enjoy value-priced food, Cafe D offers a prix-fixe menu every night until 7 pm for just $24.50. This brings an appetizer, a main course (fish, meat or pasta) and dessert, a bargain replicated in very few Boston restaurants. Cafe D also retains certain genteel touches that marked its Arbor predecessor. Tableware was whisked away and replaced after every course; large-bowl wine glasses did justice to the wines; and service was informed, efficient and friendly but not chummy. Even as the restaurant started to fill up by 8 pm (the prix-fixe obviously is not pulling in early-hour diners), the attentiveness and good humor of the waitstaff did not flag. Despite the missteps on the pork and lamb, and the disappointingly bland and pedestrian steak tartare, Cafe D has maintained Arbor's high culinary standards. This quality, combined with reasonable prices and an imaginative array of dishes, makes its "global kitchen" a great addition to this "in" neighborhood. IB

New chef takes a crack at Aujourd'hui

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Aujourd'hui at the Four Seasons has never lacked for elegance, top-tier special-occasion status, or a talented chef de cuisine. Ed Gannon (now at Lure on Martha's Vineyard), Eric Brennan (Excelsior) and Anthony Dawodu (33 Restaurant) all ran the kitchen according to the hotel's exacting standards: To wit, kitchen staff works a strictly limited eight-hour shift, a blink of an eye compared with the hours put in by most cooks. Diners enjoyed what they expected: superb service, sumptuous surroundings and a sophisticated menu long on luxury ingredients, though short on gastronomic adventure.

William Kovel, Aujourd'hui's newest chef de cuisine, says he's the man who will liven up the bill of fare "beyond conservative French" and expand the restaurant's identity from special-occasion destination to a magnet for "people who really enjoy food," albeit expensive food. Although he assumed his position back in June, his first completely new menu will debut in mid-September after he fine-tunes each recipe. At a recent tasting dinner, one of Kovel's most intriguing dishes was a lightly steamed farm egg (cooked at 160 degrees for over an hour, he says, to keep the proteins tender), topped with black truffle marmalade and a bacon emulsion, capped with egg white froth and served with thickly sliced warm toast wrapped in napery. Comfort food for the carriage trade? Look for it on the dinner menu—not the brunch menu. One mouthful and you'll agree with Kovel, who says: "Everybody underrates eggs. If you do it properly, you can do something elegant."

Which brings us to foie gras—a very generous slice—served with roasted, honeyed stone fruit and pain d'épices. "If you're going to do a luxury ingredient, you'd better make it luxurious," says Kovel, who's also overhauling the bar menu. Expect informal and adventurous items on both menus ("Offal!" says Kovel). And in the hotel's tradition of "never saying no," Kovel promises to adapt his menu to all tastes: "I can always put something together to make everybody happy."

Aujourd'hui's new chef, William Kovel

Even if you don't read the Boston Globe's business section, you've probably heard that Lydia Shire is suing Ken Himmel, one of the owners of Excelsior, for over a million dollars, on grounds that she was fired from the restaurant because of her age. Shire is quoted as saying Himmel described her replacement—Eric Brennan—as "a yo hot-shot chef." WINE

Back in Blanc

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

By nature, sauvignon blanc is strong, almost extreme in character. Subtlety isn't really one of its virtues, and it doesn't fade into the background. When blandness was fashionable, not so long ago, the grape's screaming flavor intensity relegated it to niche status in the market. In response to declining popularity, winemakers would often struggle to make sauvignon blanc taste a little milder, but trying to tone down its personality never worked. Then along came New Zealand. Its enormous international success with sauvignon blanc in a full-throttle mode, which we've now come to identify as the "Marlborough style" (uncompromising in aroma and wildly citric on the palate, produced in a stainless steel fermentation without blending in other varieties), gradually emboldened producers elsewhere to take the gloves off and make wines that express the grape's flavor potential. New Zealand's vineyards have significant natural grape-growing advantages that help show off sauvignon blanc at its best, but the country isn't unique in this attribute, and it doesn't have anything close to a monopoly on vineyards that are suitable. As the wheel has now turned and sauvignon blancs are firmly in the market mainstream, outstanding ones are being made in a variety of countries, and many are available at relatively moderate prices.

The great thing about sauvignon blanc is that it's a drinking wine. You rarely sit and ponder its nuances in the same way you might with riesling or chardonnay or any number of reds. Its charms are right out front. It doesn't hurt that sauvignon blanc is the quintessential wine with fish. Its zesty, grapey acidity cuts through rich textures, enlivens the taste of milder fish and softens salty or lemony sauces and accompaniments. Following is a list of outstanding bargains (all under $20 a bottle) from around the globe that you can pop open tonight and enjoy, providing you're one of the many who now enjoy wines with tart, fresh, pure citric flavors.

Morande Terrarum Reserva, Chile, 2005 ($10). The Casablanca Valley has to be among the least appreciated, most obscure great wine viticultural areas in the western hemisphere. Pablo Morande, widely acknowledged as a driving force behind Casablanca's development in the early 1990s, makes this sauvignon blanc in a crisp, pure, directly lemony style. Superb with raw shellfish.

Philippe Portier Quincy, Loire Valley, 2005 ($17). Pronounced "Can-zee," this is one of those obscure, tiny wine communes in the same general neighborhood as a more famo zone (in this case Sancerre), where you can sometimes find that greatest of rarities in French wines: a bargain. This wine is a marv of minerality, with lean, slightly vegetal, spicy tones that linger on the palate. It' rare for me to describe sauvignon blan as elegant, but here the adjective fits. must-try with simply prepared herb-rubbed grilled fish.

Domaine des Corbillieres Sauvignon Blanc, Touraine, 2005 ($13). Anothe Loire estate, this one produces an attra tively floral sauvignon blanc with aroma that are more green apple than citrus. Quite tart on the palate, it has a leafy, bright lemon flavor that's straightforwar and almost brash. A wine that will wake your palate on a hot, muggy day, this sau vignon would complement antipasto or a colo seafood salad extremely well.

Pomelo Sauvignon Blanc, California, 200 ($15). If this tangy beauty is any indication, California can achieve wonders with sauvigno blanc as well. Pomelo won the last sauvignon blanc blind tasting I conducted, hands down, with all but one of the panel members pickin first out of a group of a dozen wines. With aromas that are grapefruit-like and smoky, th is a richly textured but also very crisp, tart w It's layered on the palate with an orange-like flavor but no sweetness. If you're having mah mahi with some kind of a tropical fruit relish, any medium-bodied fish with assertively flavored sauces, this would be just the ticket.

Monkey Bay Sauvignon Blanc, Marlborou 2005 ($12). A favorite in a previous vintage th won our New Zealand blind tasting competitio Monkey Bay has scored again. The citrus is not quite as sharp and the fruit a bit less edgy. My choice for a goat cheese salad.

Oyster Bay Sauvignon Blanc, Marlborou 2005 ($13). With interesting herbal, leafy aromas that show an unusual smoky, bacon-like tone, this wine is the exact opposite of Monkey Bay: also delicious, but much more intense. Bone dry and sharply citric, with a slightly bitter finish reminiscent of grapefrui rind, this is a sauvignon blanc for aficionado Tart, lingering and loaded with vitality, it's something I wouldn't hesitate to serve with Asian-inspired fish recipes that include soy and ginger. ■

Books: Talkin' Baseball

To say a few books about the Red Sox have been published since their 2004 World Series victory is like saying that Rudy Seanez threw a few bad pitches this season. But amid this sea of recent BoSox books, Baseball America contributor David Laurila's Interviews From Red Sox Nation, released last month, is a standout. Instead of giving his readers a slew of stale, recycled opinions about the team from an outsider's perspective, the Cambridge native, who will discuss his book Aug. 31 at the Downtown Crossing Borders, compiled more than a 100 interviews with some of the most notable members of the Red Sox family—both past and present. The result is a collection of Red Sox stories and insights from the people who know the team best. Interviewees range from players like Curt Schilling, Jonathan Papelbon and Rico Petrocelli to the media and front-office types who know them well, including Bob Ryan, Don Orsillo, Dan Duquette and Lou Gorman. We politely thank the author for leaving out Seanez. Borders, 10 School St., Boston (617-557-7188). www.bordersstores.com. 12:30 pm. Free. —RL

CityScope: O Boston, Where Äht Thou?

Silly moniker aside, (ähts): The Boston Arts Festival is your premier opportunity to catch some culture during the Hub's last gasps of summer. This year's festival runs at Christopher Columbus Park on the waterfront and features an eclectic mix of local visual and performing artists. On the visual side, the festival gives you the chance to view and purchase works from more than 60 juried artists, from paintings and sculptures to glasswork, jewelry and pottery. And jazz is the word onstage, as performers including the Boston Lyric Opera and Boston Ballet present their take on the uniquely American musical genre. The festival runs for seven hours each day, and we suggest taking the T (Blue Line to Aquarium), because it might be, um, hähd to find pähking. *Christopher Columbus Waterfront Park, Boston (617-635-3245). www.cityofboston.gov/arts. 11 am–6 pm. Music: Blue Note Special Quit procrastinating! Sure, it's a long journey out to Lenox for the Tanglewood Music Festival, but this is your last chance before the stage goes dark until next June. Happily, the season ends on a swinging up note. The sixth annual jazz festival opens Friday at 8 pm with the "Battle of the Latin Big Bands," which includes the Spanish Harlem Orchestra and the Big Three Palladium Orchestra. Saturday's program begins at 3 pm with a live taping of the National Public Radio program Piano Jazz, featuring Elvis Costello, and the night continues with a long list of big names (trumpet legend Wynton Marsalis, vocalist Irma Thomas, tenor saxophonist Craig Handy and "voodoo" musician Dr. John, to name a few). The festival concludes Sunday with performances by the Dizzy Gillespie All-Star Big Band and the Dave Brubeck Quartet & Symphonette. As always, picnics are encouraged. Tanglewood Music Festival, West St., Lenox (888-266-1200). www.tanglewoodjazzfestival.org. $30–$75. $17–$20, lawn seating. —LPK

CityScope: A Room With a Bloom

Showing up for moral support on game days isn't the only role of a Red Sox wife. There are also parties and charity events to attend—and sometimes sponsor. One that stands out this fall is Say It With Flowers at Boston's swanky State Room. Sponsored by Shonda Schilling, Dawn Timlin and a slew of notable organizations in the city, including the Red Sox Foundation, the daytime event benefits research and patient care for those suffering from Lou Gehrig's Disease. The event kicks off at 10 am with a hands-on floral-arrangement class led by HGTV host Dale Rohman (aka America's Flower Man), followed by a wine reception, raffle, silent auction and luncheon with keynote speaker Kim Carrigan, of Fox25 Morning News. The goal of the day is to exceed the $150,000 raised at last year's event. State Room, 60 State St., Boston (888-287-3257). www.sayitwithflowersma.org. $200, all events; $75, luncheon only. —LPK

SUN.–SAT./SEPT. 10–16

Comedy: Funny Business

Bostonians love comedy, and we're not talking about the assemblage of follies tha took place against the Yankees in August. Case in point is the annual Boston Com Festival, which for one week turns our fair city into comedy central. The festival features countless shows, films, performances and workshops at Boston's usual hum purveyors—the Improv Asylum, Comedy Studio, ImprovBoston and the Comedy Connection (to name just a few)—and includes appearances by big-name acts like Lewis Black, Doug Stanhope and Denis Leary. But the highlight of the festival, as always, is the comedy competition. This year, more than 90 comics will compete i one of seven preliminary shows at the Comedy Connection (beginning Sept. 10), hopes of eventually reaching the contest finals, held at the Cutler Majestic Theatr Sept. 16. The competition winner takes home $10,000, which is some serious funn money. Various locations around Boston (617-782-8100). www.bostoncomedyfestival.c Check Web site for times and prices. —RL

Regarding Henry

Matt Dillon shines as Bukowski's sad-sack loser, Henry Chinaski, in Factotum.

BY SEAN BURNS

It is a strange sociological footnote that young men of a certain temperament cannot seem to pass through their early 20s without, at least briefly, becoming obsessed with Charles Bukowski. The oft-imitated barstool poet, who died in 1994 at the miraculously advanced age of 73, left behind some 45 books of poetry and prose—a funny, sad and altogether extraordinary body of work soaked in rotgut whiskey and melancholy yearning.

Matt Dillon, as chronic loser Henry Chinaski, demonstrates two of Factotum's recurring themes.

Bukowski stories have been adapted for the screen before, but never quite with the fidelity and soulfulness of Factotum, Norwegian director Bent Hamer's inspired reworking of the author's 1975 novel. Until now, the gold standard was Barbet Schroeder's 1987 dorm-room staple, Barfly, which boasted an original screenplay by Bukowski himself, as well as a wild, larger-than-life performance by Mickey Rourke as the writer's fictional alter ego, Henry Chinaski. Barfly still holds up as a joyous and wooly piece of work, but nonetheless feels a bit over-romanticized, unwilling to face the sadness inherent in those old Skid Row stories.

Factotum isn't as funny as Barfly (few movies are), but it's a lot grittier and more down-to-earth. We're told up front that the title refers to a man who performs many jobs, and although we watch Matt Dillon's Henry Chinaski try just about everything from delivering ice to working in a pickle factory, the punch line is that he never manages to hold one for very long. (He's already been fired once before the opening credits even roll, the start of a recurring gag in which flustered boss men aren't just miffed because they have to can this useless wino, they're extra-angry because they had to go looking around for him in seedy bars in order to do so.)

And that's pretty much all you're going to get for plot, folks. Chinaski wakes up hungover, goes out and gets a job, promptly gets himself fired, writes for a while, then goes out and get plastered. Rinse, wash, repeat.

Dillon makes a magnificent Chinaski—brawny and bearded, but speaking in an incongruously high voice that mimics Bukowski's singsong cadence with such dead-on accuracy it's almost eerie. The actor plays against his naturally imposing figure by employing surprisingly delicate hand gestures, and his eyes are sad, almost haunted. Sure, Henry's a boisterous, sometimes violent drunk, but Dillon's revelatory work illuminates the contradictions of the character—a foulmouthed alcoholic bum who also loves classical music and writes beautiful poetry.

Of course, this wouldn't be a proper Bukowski tale without slatternly women. Indie-film icon Lili Taylor turns in her best work in ages as Jan, a rough-and-tumble tavern girl with an insatiable sexual appetite and behavior that can charitably be described as erratic. Henry and Jan are either the best or the worst thing ever to happen to each other, and even though their on-again, off-again relationship is punctuated by fisticuffs and usually encrusted in vomit, Dillon and Taylor share some startlingly intimate, genuinely romantic moments amid all the squalor. (He loves her even after she gives him crabs.)

Hamer, who previously directed the 2003 art-house hit Kitchen Stories, appears to be from the Jim Jarmusch/Aki Kaurismäki school of deadpan minimalism. His scenes usually aren't composed of more than one or two shots, and they play out for a beat or two longer than expected. The stillness of Hamer's camera yields unexpected emotional dividends. Given ample room to breathe and settle into their characters, his actors are able to play more than one emotion at a time. Sequences that start out funny drift into sadness, and, likewise, darker moments take on an absurdly comic tinge once the awkward silences start piling up.

Visually speaking, Factotum constantly emphasizes Chinaski's smallness and anonymity in relation to sprawling, vacant downtown L.A. There's one breathtaking image of Dillon leaning out the window of a brake factory, smoking a cigarette just seconds after he explicitly has been told not to. On the sound track we hear him reading a heartfelt poem, asserting his hopes and aspirations, but the camera retreats farther and farther back until he's a mere speck on a building, as if swallowed by the run-down industrial landscape.

That shot and countless others like it cut to the humanistic core of Bukowski's enduring appeal—the insistence that bums and hookers and winos and sluts are not without their own ideas and dreams. There's poetry everywhere if you're willing to look hard enough; it's in the dive bar, at the racetrack, and in the ruined lives of people we walk past and ignore every morning on our way to work. iB nplete narcissistic meltdown from M. The fine actor Giamatti is stranded here as a sad-sack apart- complex superintendent who discovers a cal sea nymph (played with a chilly whisper ce Dallas Howard) swimming in his crummy ng's pool. An endlessly convoluted mythol- volving ancient magic rituals and laughable n wolves follows, along with the psychologi- elling development that our war-torn world hon be saved by a messianic writer, played (to esumably everlasting shame and regret) by nalan himself. Throw in the fact that the vil character in the movie just happens to be ie critic, and you realize you're watching an dulged filmmaker's egomaniacal persecu- alvation fantasy. The movie's whimsical fairy lements are ill-served by Shyamalan's trade- static-camera and ominous silences. ni Vice ★★★½ expect any pastel-clad fashion plates or Phil hs sing-alongs in writer-director Michael 's bracingly adult big-screen blow-up of his al '80s TV series. Launching Crockett and into the 21st century with nary a trace of gia, Mann shoots this darker, nastier, but heavily stylized Vice in state-of-the-art digi- leo, pushing the boundaries of mainstream ive filmmaking in cryptic, experimental new ions. The plot is standard-issue undercover und-robbers double-dealing, but the visuals und are given a hypnotic, almost abstract ty. Colin Farrell and Jamie Foxx star as the ressed detectives, mumbling gruff, staccato -guy lines and dispatching baddies with ss efficiency. Chinese movie legend Gong Li s as a high-ranking money launderer who falls into a swoony affair with Farrell's conscience-stricken Crockett. She can barely speak English, but in a film that's made up of 90 percent longing gazes, she hardly needs to. The very definition of style over substance, Miami Vice is all about the vibe: macho, heartsick and foreboding. The movie is simply mesmerizing from first frame to last. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Monster House ★★★

Executive produced by Steven Spielberg and Robert Zemeckis, this raucous, 3D computer-animated children's yarn is a throwback to ripping 1980s Amblin Entertainment adventures like Gremlins and The Goonies. With his parents away on Halloween weekend, young puberty-stricken D.J. (voiced by Michael Musso) discovers that something's not quite right with that old, run-down house across the street. Turns out, it's alive—possessed by a particularly ill-tempered spirit and prone to eating anyone foolish enough to ring the front doorbell. The animation is simply marvelous, anthropomorphizing the very unhappy home into a sinister face, complete with blinking window shades for eyes and a long red carpet that serves as something like a tongue. It's up to D.J. and his pals to venture inside and extinguish the furnace, before countless trick-or-treaters end up as lunch. I'm frankly baffled as to why any studio would release this Halloween delight in the middle of the summer, but it's one boisterously entertaining kid's flick, refreshingly devoid of the pop culture references and bathroom jokes that mar most children's entertainment these days. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest ★★½

Bogged down by blockbuster elephantiasis, this noisy, seemingly endless sequel to the surprise 2003 smash is more exhausting than exhilarating. Johnny Depp returns as the roguish, strangely fey Captain Jack Sparrow, again swishing and slurring and generally stealing any scene that isn't already nailed down. Problem is, everyone who had so much as one speaking line in the bloated original has come back for more, and screenwriters Ted Elliot and Terry Rosario are so busy laying the unwieldy expository groundwork for a massive, multi-film mythology (the next sequel is already in the can, ready for release next summer) that this one takes forever and a day to get rolling. A shame, as the swashbuckling scenes are delightful Rube Goldberg set pieces, reminiscent of Indiana Jones' funniest dustups. The special effects work is also first-rate, with the great character actor Bill Nighy working wonders as squid-faced, undead pirate Davy Jones. Producer Jerry Bruckheimer and director Gore Verbinski don't seem to understand that sometimes less is more. There's a charming 100-minute entertainment buried somewhere within these two and a half fatiguing hours. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Scoop ★½

If Woody Allen isn't even going to try anymore, then I don't see why we should have to bother, either. The 36th theatrical feature written and directed by the grindingly prolific Allen, Scoop feels like it only exists thanks to sheer force of habit. It's a wan, wheezy affair, made up almost entirely of scenes from Allen's earlier films. Remember the good old days when Woody used to rip off masters like Bergman and Fellini? Now he's just ripping off himself. Scarlett Johansson stars as a dim-bulb, slatternly journalism student who somehow magically receives clues regarding the identity of a London serial killer from the ghost of a hard-boiled reporter, played by Deadwood's Ian McShane, who's slumming here. Woody himself tags along as an annoying vaudeville magician who, like most of the movie's one-liners, seems to have been transplanted from the 1930s. Shot entirely in static master shots, and lifting giant chunks of story directly from Alice, Broadway Danny Rose and Manhattan Murder Mystery, Scoop is stunningly lazy and inert, even by the lax standards of Allen's late career. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Snakes on a Plane ★★★

For a plot synopsis, see title. This exuberantly lousy, wildly entertaining crap-tacular keys into everybody's two worst fears: reptiles and flying. Don't pretend for a second that the massive underground phenomenon that's sprung up around this flick isn't our collective post–Sept. 11 paranoia weirdly metastasizing itself into schlock. Replace the snakes with Al Qaeda and you've got United 93—but then again, that particular movie didn't have Sam Jackson cussing up a storm while swatting away fake-looking computer-generated snakes in the cockpit. (Remember, those Godzilla flicks are all not so secretly about Hiroshima.) Snakes on a Plane is a proudly brain-dead affair, and yet something absurdly entertaining and unexpected seems to happen roughly every five minutes or so. Director David Ellis is a killer craftsman, striking just the right half-kidding tone. He never veers into the camp that would make this all a postmodern joke, and at the same time never quite takes himself seriously enough for it to become dull. This is a quick, efficient exploitation picture, with Z-grade special effects and a contagious, slaphappy spirit. Bad movies should always be this much fun! (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Talledega Nights: The Ballad of Ricky Bobby ★★½

However you felt about Will Ferrell's cheerfully incoherent Anchorman: The Legend of Ron Burgundy will probably hold true for this virtual remake. With NASCAR racing standing in for newscasting, Ferrell stars once more as a dimwitted, headstrong superstar brought down a peg or two by a more talented rival who challenges his straight-white-male delusions of entitlement. But instead of Christina Applegate's anchor-lady, Ferrell's cuddly lummox here faces off against a French homosexual Formula One racer, outrageously played by Sascha Baron Cohen (TV's Ali G and star of the upcoming Borat.) When it's really cooking, the movie has a field day tweaking Red State pieties, satirizing our NASCAR nation as a flag-waving hotbed of product placement and religious intolerance. But Ferrell is a performer who requires a short leash, and his regular collaborator Adam McKay feels more like an enabler than a director. The wildly inconsistent tone spins out in every direction imaginable for the sake of a gag. Sharper focus and a little discipline could've brought this one over the finish line. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

World Trade Center ★★★

Is the world ready for the feel-good Sept. 11 movie of the year? In sharp contrast to Paul Greengrass' harrowing, verité-style United 93, Oliver Stone's World Trade Center is a lavishly produced, old-fashioned Hollywood melodrama. It's so mawkish and corny that I'm almost uncomfortable admitting just how much I liked it. Nicolas Cage stars as Port Authority cop John McLoughlin, who along with fellow officer Will Jimeno (played by Crash's locksmith Michael Pena) wound up trapped beneath a mountain of rubble and concrete some 20 feet under the WTC's collapsed concourse. Devoid of the hyperkinetic audio-visual feeding frenzies that have marked Stone's work since the early '90s, World Trade Center is photographed as an almost stately procession of bold, simple images. It's a good movie, but a movie nonetheless—one with big stars, clichés, a rousing score and a happy ending that bends over backward to warm your heart. I don't want to sound like those people who whine that it's "too soon" for films about Sept. 11, but perhaps a small part of me does feel that it might be too soon for one this slick and reassuring. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs) floats away on the blithe comic riffs of star Owen Wilson. As a lazy couch surfer inadvertently wrecking the marriage of his newlywed pals Matt Dillon and Kate Husdon, Wilson makes for a lousy bad guy. His drawling, stoner line-readings are altogether too endearing and sincere for the Jack Black-ish role of an overgrown adolescent hell-raiser. Dillon is even more miscast, doing a bad Ben Stiller impression as an uptight, sputtering yuppie worn down to his last nerve. Perhaps directors Joe and Anthony Russo sensed something was amiss, as suddenly all character continuity flies out the window and the film tries turning Wilson's blissed-out layabout into an unlikely hero. It's a bizarre and illogical choice, but still a good deal more agreeable than where the picture originally seemed headed. Along this bumpy road, there's some fine supporting work from The 40-Year-Old Virgin's scene stealer Seth Rogen, and a weird, seriously unfunny turn from Michael Douglas as Dillon's psychotic father-in-law. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

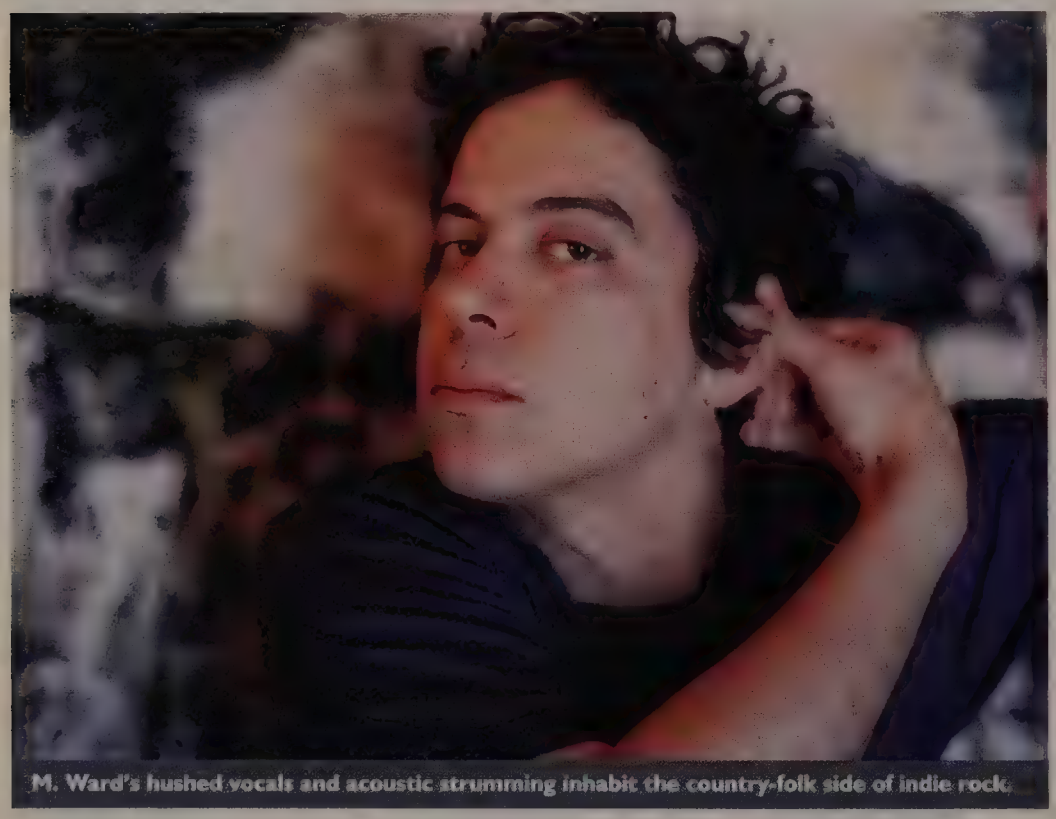
Mystery Man

M. Ward finds magic in the attic with his indie-rock friends.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Matt Ward offers one explanation for his hushed singing and guitar playing, both in a solo setting and with musicians that include Bright Eyes and My Morning Jacket's Jim James.

"When I first started four-tracking at my parents' house, I didn't really want to wake anybody up. I guess it turned into this vocal style," says the indie rocker better known by his nickname, M. Ward. "There's very little that I understand about anything that I do—it's all a giant mystery to me."



M. Ward's hushed vocals and acoustic strumming inhabit the country-folk side of indie rock.

Mystery aside, listeners are slowly waking up to the 32-year-old songwriter's sublime records and performances, which include a Sept. 17 date at the Somerville Theatre.

"In 2001, I started doing music full-time by accident," says Ward, whose previous job was teaching children to read. "I'm really fortunate to be friends with all these amazing musicians. It's a good feeling to know you're not alone in this field."

That field is the country-folk side of indie rock. Jim James surfaces to lend haunting vocals to two tracks on Ward's new CD, Post-War, while Neko Case does the same on "To Go Home," a Daniel Johnston cover. "It's nice working with friends," Ward says. "You can be relaxed in the studio and experiment with ideas and try stuff out to see what works. Nobody gets their feelings hurt if something doesn't work—and nobody gets their feelings hurt if something does."

Ward also tapped a fuller band, including drummers Rachel Blumberg and Jordan Hudson, who sound like waves crashing on the Johnston cover. "I didn't feel like I wanted the whole record to be bombastic," Ward says. "I was wavering between extremes that I've never tried before, and having some tension release with songs that have a little bit of levity."

He added frisky piano on "To Go Home" and the old-timey "Rollercoaster," while capturing a pronounced surf-rock vibe with the vibrato-tinged guitar of "Neptune's Net."

"We had a great time, and it seemed to fit in some abstract way," Ward says. "Since I started playing in bands, surf music was an inspiration, that sort of simplicity. And coming from Southern California, it just becomes part of the music, whether you know it—or even like it."

Although Ward played guitar in Bright Eyes' anti-Bush Vote for Change tour in 2004, politics on Post-War are more personal in nature. Of the reflective title song he says, "I like the idea of it meaning a hundred different things to different people. We're about to enter a new era and that's what it's going to be called, I imagine. And I also wanted to go against the last record I did, Transistor Radio, which looked backward in a lot of ways."

Transistor Radio was based on his experiences as a youth in California: "Part of the idea of that record was to go back to memories that I have of when I was first discovering music through the radio, driving around with my parents.

"My mom listens to just classical music and my dad listens to gospel and country & western, and he introduced me to Johnny Cash when I was really young," says Ward, who now resides in Portland, Ore. "I've spent most of my time listening to older records. That's where I get most of my inspiration for production and songwriting ideas.

"So much of it is the quality of the recording—so many aspects of technology right now are robbing music of my favorite elements, the nuances and mistakes and the sound that you get from analog systems," he says. "Digital technology is like a screen. The only thing the technology relates to the listener is the highest of highs and the lowest of lows. It takes away the most interesting part of the way drums and acoustic guitars sound."

As such, Ward prefers recording in a friend's Portland attic. "It's a really homey environment, not one of those sterile, manufactured rooms," he says. "You're in your friend's house. In my opinion, that's the best way to record, without feeling any pressure."

Now Ward is moving the same four-piece band from the studio to the road. "I'm excited about this tour, because I've had a yearlong break," he adds. "If you have no time to catch your breath, it can be hard to stay energized."

He's kept energized throughout his life by incorporating diverse musical influences into his genre-blurring sound. "I received The Beatles Anthology as a gift when I was 15, and that's the way I learned to play the guitar," says Ward, who later embraced Louis Armstrong and finger-picker John Fahey.

"The whole idea of singing began as an idea for melody and lyrical ideas. Then I started to experiment with the vocal side," he says. "Now I'm knee-deep in the experiment." IB plays Sept. 17 at the Somerville Theatre.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you we The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Jenny Johnson and Erin Tracy posed with our Summer Dining Issue in the town of Grasse on the French Riviera. Later that evening, they took a boat cruise over to the Geraldo Rivera.

Rachel Gauthier spent a day at Rembrandt Park in Amsterdam, or as Americans call it, "That park where you can totally smoke weed."

While in the Galapagos to plan their wedding, Kelly Sullivan and Mark Salvatore met the four ushers: Leonardo, Donatello, Raphael and Michelangelo.

Maeve O'Meara and Alison Guest caught some waves in Costa Rica. But no worries—they released the waves back into the wild after they were done.

Eric Patel brought our Homes Issue over to the Colosseum during a recent trip to Italy. The Romans apparently liked some of our design ideas and have decided to convert the old tiger cages into a rumpus room.

N.J. congressman Bill Pascrell Jr. love the IMPROPER, though not as much as loves "Livin' on a Prayer."

MMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Thievery Kills Karma

To the spineless asshole with no morals who entered my car in South Boston and stole my favorite Oakley sunglasses (among other things): Who the hell are you to take someone else's stuff—from their locked car, no less?! How would you like it if I came into your house, went into your bedroom and took all of your CDs, or your iPod, or your blankie? Because that's all you are—a baby who doesn't understand the difference between right and wrong. Didn't your mother teach you that stealing is wrong? Hell, if you'd asked me for my sunglasses, I might have even given them to you. You have absolutely NO RIGHT to invade someone's personal space for your own well-being, or to update your collection of things that aren't yours. I hope karma bites you in the ass and something really bad happens to you, especially if it involves the pit bull up the street. I know you're reading this. Go to hell.

Paging Dr. Love

Why am I still trying so hard to find you? I miss you, I guess. I thought fate would have led us down intersecting paths by now—but you know I'm infinitely impatient. I just want to see how you are. You always worked too hard, and I know I must owe you at least one coffee for all those months of free therapy you gave me, my muse. Let me show you how deeply I appreciate all that you did for me, every day, from that first meeting until the end. I think we'd have fun out here in the real world. Please reply, ASAP.

Meet Me in Margaritaville?

I met you Aug. 1 on the D Line—the first day of the heat wave. I got on at Longwood. You'd gotten on at Hynes, and said that every time you get on at your stop, it's really crowded; you love being "plastered to the door"! We only had a few stops to talk before I got off at Chestnut Hill and you continued on. You were wearing a blue button-down dress shirt, and had brown hair and a goatee. I was petite, with brown curly hair (but I think I might've been wearing it up!). We both wished we were at the Sox game rather than coming home from work. We started talking about the couple that ended up in your lap, PDAing, and I suggested envisioning margaritas in your head to get you through the experience! You made me smile and, better yet, laugh; I hadn't done that in a long time. You have a nice smile yourself, and I'd love to see you again.

Washed Up

To the outdated server: You should really look into finding a job that doesn't involve interacting with humans. With a tableside manner that leaves something to be desired and an attitude that makes your fellow coworkers scared to even stand next to you, I'd say your days working at a restaurant are numbered. Just because you've been working longer than the new servers doesn't mean you run a totalitarian establishment. (When you're checking us out at closing, who cares if there's one fingerprint on the silverware glass?) Give us a break and go back to school, get a real job and do something with your life. You're 26. The restaurant business doesn't want you anymore.

rockie horoscope

IRGO AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

me remind you again about "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" and warn that when the sun in Virgo confronts disruptive Uranus in your Pisces house of tners, a certain amount of shit can hit the fan. Hope that the worst thing that pens is a sudden change of plans (e.g., a rain delay) and that you quickly recover find something else to do with your significant other. But if that's not the case—if 're in for a big surprise—let's pray that it's a spectacular birthday celebration.

BRA

PTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

nuch is happening on so many fronts that it seems the t sensible (and enjoyable) thing to do is simply hang t with neighbors, friends and colleagues. As the fickle er of fate would have it, your Venus ruler is not likely to ravate any of the edgy situations that are about to ode. So plan on spending the holiday weekend doing the e things you've done in prior years, preferably with ther Libra and a Taurus or two. Scorpio might be a safe as well.

CORPIO

CTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

ly, if ever, would I call a Scorpion a "safe bet," but if re going to do some damage, you'll probably do it to self sometime after Mars and Pluto, your co-ruling ets, have formed a difficult square on Aug. 29. Beyond , danger lies with how a strict parent or employer will t the freedom you have at home or in the office. It nt seem like a battle between idealism and pragma- , with greater emphasis placed on the rules than on game being played. Once again, but not forever, ter is your protector.

AGITTARIUS

VEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Centaur hardly needs to be reminded about the power sitive thinking. Nevertheless, with so much discord in ir, and with fear edging out hope, it's still possible to t on your Jupiter ruler's favorable trine to futuristic us on Aug. 29 to get you through the tough astrological cts. Unless you're having reconstructive surgery, Mars' cation of Pluto in your sign is usually nasty; not that els and sutures are fun, but there's hope the result will ccessful.

APRICORN

CEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

first of the three oppositions between your Saturn and Neptune in your Aquarius house of assets and es occurs as the month ends. Although the chief ence of this once-every-35-years aspect is on various ns and their politics, if you remember what began 17 s ago when the two planets met in Capricorn, you'll an idea of what may transpire before the last sition takes place in June 2007. Did you finish school 89? Move? Change jobs?

QUARIUS

UARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

for Capricorn. Because Saturn is your old-school g planet, you could be on the same 17-year cycle of th and change as the Goat. Besides, with essionable Neptune lodged in Aquarius, vibes from ted planetary aspects may have a noticeable impact. hing to be aware of is the positive feedback you can ve when prosperous Jupiter favors your modern-day us ruler about a week before the analytical Virgo sun ses it. Their annual opposition can be quite the -up call.

PSCES

RUARY 19–MARCH 19

again you have more in common with Aquarians you might think, because your Neptune ruler is dded in their sign. But you'll get additional input naybe grief) from Capricorns, whose ruling planet, Saturn, will oppose Neptune from now through June 2007. Read the two preceding forecasts to find a thread that might link you together. Here's a hint: What began in 1989 for you, when Saturn and Neptune last met, and turned into a problem in 1998–99, when they formed their waxing square?

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Getting serious about a romantic encounter or having doubts? Inspired by your latest creation or daunted by the amount of work involved? Love and labor go hand in hand during Venus' merger with Saturn in Leo, a high-spirited fire sign like your own. The question is whether or not conflicted emotions will result in a blow-out, the sort of self-destructive behavior that takes place when your Mars ruler is thwarted by a Plutonic power play. Passions left to smolder tend to erupt; try a safer outlet, like kick-boxing.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Self-sacrifice is all well and good—it seems to surface whenever your kind-hearted Venus ruler is tested by idealistic Neptune—but the impulse passes quickly enough. Come Labor Day weekend and a favorable alignment with regenerative Pluto, and you'll recover your sense of self-worth. By then Venus will be in Virgo, a sensible, stable earth sign like your own, so no matter what surprises are sprung when erratic Uranus is activated, you're less likely to be thrown for a loop.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Every sign is on tenterhooks, at least until the Virgo-Pisces full moon eclipse has come and gone. While your Mercury ruler speeds through Virgo, another nervous mutable sign like your own, your best bet is to stay tuned to the latest news bulletins and, if it makes you feel safer, to keep an overnight bag packed. One of the advantages of being a mutable sign is the speed at which you adapt to changing conditions. While others fume and fuss and deliberate over decisions, you're onto Plan B, headed for the next best thing.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Money still matters, but while Mercury, Venus, the sun and Mars transit pragmatic Virgo, you'll be less concerned with scoring tickets for entertainment events than in amassing funds for practical purposes. Since Virgo rules your third house of communication and commuting, you soon could be checking out a new set of wheels or a nifty new computer. Although the lunar eclipse on Sept. 7 is partial and invisible in the States, the Moon Child may suddenly feel powerless.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Who knew the Lion would need another morsel of information before proceeding with confidence? Along with all the major astrological events scheduled to happen as August ends—especially the opposition between restrictive Saturn in your sign and nebulous, sometimes noxious, Neptune in your house of allies and adversaries—the seemingly insignificant merger of your sun ruler with minute Mercury could be the one thing that'll keep you from falling for the B.S. being slung.
